Shelter Campaign Hits $1,300

This week, a young school-age girl came into The Star with $10 to help Yvonne Brown get a new animal shelter, and promised to save $10 each month from her allowance to continue donating.

She may have been the youngest, but she certainly wasn't the only Winchester animal lover who has donated money.

So far, The Star has collected $1,323 to help Brown continue her life's work of helping animals brought to her Winchester Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Shelter.

The shelter is now only a name and a person, Brown, as it has been moved out of two Woburn kennels in the past two months.

But Brown is searching for another place to house her strays, and according to Harriet Connor of the Winchester SPCA, there are several possibilities, including building a shelter next to a planned Woburn dog pound, if it is built.

In the meantime, The Star will continue to collect funds for the shelter through Aug. 9. A list of contributors will be printed Aug. 11.

Balancing Act

WITH THE GREATEST OF EASE — Magicians and mimes delighted, amused, entertained and amazed their peers in the audience at McCall Jr. High auditorium last week, as kids from the Recreation Dept. performed feats of legerdemain in a magic show Friday. As the crowd watched breathlessly, Brian Cunio demonstrated a feat of skill and daring never before attempted in the Western Hemisphere — balancing a newspaper on his chin. Negotiators Forge Police Pact

One-Year Agreement Calls For 7¼% Raises

By DAVE LEECO

If Town Meeting members were looking for a major cut in the raise offered to police when it turned down the negotiated police contract this spring, they didn't get it.

On the other hand, Town Meeting will get a chance at cutting police raises a year sooner than usual, as the contract agreed to this week by the town and police bargaining units is for one year, rather than the customary two.

During the second round of negotiations, the police union gave up a quarter-percent raise and a second year of the contract which would have given them a 6½ percent raise beginning July 1, 1984.

In return, the town agreed to a change that will guarantee automatic increases in night-duty pay each year.

The town had already received a major concession in the first round of contract talks, when the police union agreed to form a joint town-police committee to look into the benefits for injured officers, benefits the town manager say have

By DAVE LEECO

The police union salvaged nearly every benefit granted to members under the contract rejected by Town Meeting this spring. But their victory at the bargaining table will be short-lived — their contract will come up again in a year.

On Monday, bargaining units for the police and the town signed a memorandum of understanding, the major step in ending a second round of contract negotiation ordered by Town Meeting.

The police got almost the same raise specified in the rejected contract — 7¼ percent as opposed to the 7½ raise promised for the first year of the rejected two-year contract.

All the benefit increases included in the rejected contract were in the new compromise, and in the case of night duty bonuses, the benefits were increased.

But there was one major change from the rejected contract to the new pact, a change that members of both the town and the police negotiating teams said was crucial.

The new police contract is for one year, rather than the customary two. That gives Town Meeting a chance to seek smaller raises next year, at the same time contracts for most of the other town employee groups are coming up.

But at least for this year, the police got what they wanted. Moreover, by keeping their raise around 7 percent, despite statements of Town Meeting members that the raise was excessive, the police may have set a precedent for contract negotiations between the School Committee and the custodians, negotiations not yet begun.

The memorandum of understanding still must be approved by the Board of Selectmen, the Winchester Police Assn. officers, and eventually Town Meeting. (See separate story for the memorandum's terms.)

Members of both the police negotiating team and the town bargaining unit say they feel the police contract is one Town Meeting will accept. But one selectman who quit the negotiations in protest feels that the pact hammered out in a dozen meetings is not at all what Town Meeting requested last spring.

Town Meeting rejected the contracts for the police and custodians, as well as proposed 7 percent raises for management, at its spring session. In doing so, Town Meeting members demanded town officials come back to them with new contracts, and with a financial plan showing how the raises would be funded.

Town Manager Thomas Groux said that the 7¼ percent raise granted the police union is in line with his recently completed five-year forecast, at least for this year.

School Supt. Hunt Picks Up

By LIZ WILLEN

The search for the school superintendent of Winchester's hopes, dreams, fantasies and expectations is on.

The seven-member Superintendent Search Committee appointed last June to sift through a mound of 153 completed applications has whittled the number of applicants down to a workable size.

"We have now reviewed all of the resumes and narrowed the field to about 35 candidates," said committee member Robert Frank. "By the School Committee meeting next week, we hope to have further narrowed the field to about 15."

The School Committee itself has finally come up with its own criteria for choosing a superintendent, which is expected to be approved at their August 9 meeting and then passed on to the Search Committee.

Despite the workable number of candidates, and the compiled list of qualifications sought in a new superintendent, the search will not be an easy one.

"We're obviously looking for someone who can walk on water," said School Committee Chairperson Constance Papas.

The Screening Committee must first of all find someone who meets the state Board of Education requirements, which say that the superintendent should know everything from sociology to labor relations and collective bargaining, as well as fiscal planning, public relations and have a range of skills in management, education, school law and administration.

The Screening Committee must also find someone who meets the stringent requirements of the School Committee, and the teachers, students and citizens who made their own personal requirements known at a series of hearings in June.

"Both faculty and students expressed a great deal of concern about who the new superintendent would be at the hearings," said School Committee member Mary Jane Weylman. "They want a highly visible, involved, caring individual who is there a lot. Despite the June heat, and the

Cemetery Board Debate Rises Again

By LIZ WILLEN

The subject of deferred payments for cemetery plots at Wildwood Cemetery got buried at Monday night's selectmen meeting.

Instead, members of the Cemetery Advisory Committee and selectmen again debated the role of the committee in making improvements in the cemetery.

They also resumed debate on a possible change in the town charter which would make the committee a Cemetery Commission and give it the power to make improvements.

Cemetery Committee member William Ryerson said that many residents had become dissatisfied with Wildwood.

"We are your watchdog committee and we find there is a lot more than just maintenance," Ryerson told the selectmen. "We'd like to upgrade the price of lots and we're concerned about dumping. We are asking what you want to do with the committee."

Selectmen Michael Saraco told the board what he wanted to do with the committee.

"The Cemetery Advisory Committee must have certain responsibilities and they can't because they aren't a governing commission," he said. "I know the problems in the cemetery. I know what they'd like to do."

Saraco insisted that the only way to do what the committee wants would be through a change in the town's charter that would give the committee the authority to run the cemetery.

"If they are going to have any responsibility they must have the authority," he insisted. "I want to get that clear."

Selectman Alan Macdonald said he wasn't sure if he agreed with Saraco. "It may not be necessary to go through the process of a charter change," he said.

Committee Secretary Candace Margles said that she'd heard mixed reactions from residents concerning the charter change.

"There seems to be a camp for it and a camp against it," she said. "Those who are opposed are against it strictly because it involves a change in the charter."

Selectmen Chairman Edward O'Connell said that if a charter change was justified, it should be brought about. Yet he maintained that the committee could have more clout without necessarily becoming a commission.

"Wildwood is a vital piece of town property, and if your scope as a committee should be broadened, let's redefine it," he commented.

If the committee's powers were redefined, they would appoint a superintendent to run Wildwood Cemetery.

"We've been needing a superintendent for a long time and we still need one," Margles said.

"It seems so elementary to have a superintendent," said selectman Mark Lombardi. "A year has gone by since we talked about this and nothing has hap-

Center Eatery Plan Dropped

Liquor License Bid Is Withdrawn

By ALISON McPHAIL

A would-be entrepreneur has dropped plans to open a restaurant off of Thompson st. after two months of planning.

Fred Oram of 48 Wildwood st. had already made his proposal known to the Board of Selectmen and returned his liquor license application all completed except for a description of the restaurant floorplan.

But when asked about his proposal last week, Oram responded, "There isn't one." Last Thursday he withdrew his application and was refunded the required $500 deposit.

He refused to comment further on the reason why he had changed his mind, but Rick White, assistant to the Town Manager said, "I think he was having some sort of leasing problems."

Kevin Foley, owner of the Locatelli building in which Oram was considering setting up his restaurant, was not available for comment.

In mid-May when Oram first mentioned to the Board of Selectmen that he was considering establishing a restaurant with a liquor license off of Thompson st., they encouraged him to fill out an application.

"He was very well received," said Economic Development Coordinator John Connery. "He was a first-class fellow, a

Ultimate Frisbee Flies Into Summer - New Sport Started

There's a new sport in town. Two local athletes, Ross Cunningham and Brian Moore, are starting an Ultimate Frisbee team.

Although some potential players have shown interest in joining, they need many more people to join. The first meeting will be held this Sunday from 3 to 5 p.m. at the high school field. Ross and Brian urge those 15-year-olds and older to join them and practice the basics of the game.

Ultimate Frisbee, usually found on college campuses, is a mixture of football and basketball. The rules are simple, according to Ross.

The game is played on a 60-by-40 yard field with two end zones. The frisbee is passed from player to player until the end zone is reached. The players can never run with the frisbee, and the offense must complete every pass. If the frisbee is dropped or intercepted, the frisbee goes to the other team.

Also, there is no referee officiating the game. This, according to Ross is "great. It avoids arguments if everyone plays right."

Because Ultimate Frisbee is a team sport it is fun for everyone. So if you want to add excitement to your summer, join the new Ultimate Frisbee team.

Winchester Hospital Progress Report

HOSPITAL INNOVATION — Winchester Hospital has begun treating glaucoma patients with laser beam surgery, an technique which results in the patient going home the same day as the operation. Ophthalmologist George E. Ghareeb, M.D., performs the surgery on Olivia Hurd of Reading while Mark Bernstein of the laser beam rental company helps operate controls at the power source.

Laser Beam Surgery Available Now At Winchester Hospital

Patients who suffer from glaucoma, a condition of the eye characterized by increased pressure inside the eye, can now seek treatment by laser beam surgery at Winchester Hospital.

The hospital began using the Coherent Argon Laser on July 22, when five glaucoma patients were treated by George E. Ghareeb, M.D., ophthalmologist.

Prior to laser beam surgery, glaucoma patients, who required surgery, underwent an operation with local anesthesia, and remained two to three days in the hospital.

Laser beam surgery, called laser trabeculaplasty, takes 10 to 15 minutes. The patient arrives at the hospital, has the brief surgery, and then goes home — some even back to work. There is no recovery period as there is with general anesthesia.

Two drops of anesthetic are placed in the eye to anesthetize it so that a lens can be placed against the eye. The lens, which looks like the lens of a camera, has a mirror inside which acts as a periscope, and allows the physician to see the sides of the eye while he looks straight ahead.

Using the laser beam, the physician makes microscopic burns in the trabecular meshwork. (The meshwork is a spongy material which lies in the angles — or corners — inside the eye.) The resulting microscopic scars tighten the adjacent meshwork, and improve the escape of fluid from the eye, thereby decreasing the pressure which, if it remains elevated, damages the optic nerve, and can cause blindness. The technique is easier on the eye than the still-used surgical techniques.

Because laser beam surgery is done on an outpatient basis, the procedure is far less expensive for the patient, who pays only for the surgery and the use of the equipment, and is not faced with the cost of hospitalization.

It is cost saving for Winchester Hospital as well because the hospital rents, rather than buys the equipment. The equipment is brought by van to the hospital on the fourth Monday of every month, and glaucoma patients are scheduled every 15 minutes between 9 and 11:30 a.m. by all staff ophthalmologists Paul A. Vernaglia, Warren D. Haley, Richard L. Dallow, Thomas P. Cronin, Edward F. McCarthy and George E. Ghareeb.

Similar equipment is rented by hospitals from Maine to Rhode Island, with the company assuming the responsibility of servicing the equipment and providing personnel to operate some of the controls so that the physician can concentrate solely on the patient while he performs the surgery.

Hospital President Jack Hunter Elected Chairman

Winchester Hospital President Jack R. Hunter was recently elected to a one-year term as chairman of the West Suburban Hospital Association Inc., West Suburban Hospital Research & Education Association Inc. and West Suburban Joint Diagnostic Services Inc.

The three organizations, based in Concord, are separate corporations headed by one board of directors. Hunter has just completed a year as treasurer of the three organizations.

Activities of the West Suburban Hospital Association Inc., founded 10 years ago, include two legislative breakfasts per year, held to inform legislators on issues affecting area hospitals, and a membership program through which employees of member hospitals can enjoy discount prices on trips, sports events, movies, and museums.

The West Suburban Hospital Research & Education Association Inc., also 10 years old, provides a number of shared services, including the operation of the Consortium For Information Resources and a recruitment service. West Suburban Joint Diagnostic Services Inc. was founded this past May for the purpose of filing for state Determination of Need (DON) approval for a free-standing Nuclear Magnetic Resonance diagnostic service. (Winchester Hospital was one of nine area community hospitals which jointly filled the DON in May.)

THE OLD AND THE NEW — Jack R. Hunter (l), president of Winchester Hospital who was recently elected as the new chairman of three west suburban hospital associations, offers "thanks" and a plaque to outgoing board member Matthew O. Anderson.

Ambulance Dollars, Change

Prognosis Poor For Paramedics

By DAVE LEECO

Three area hospitals want to bring a touch of show business to Winchester — specifically, a local version of the television program "Emergency."

But business considerations — specifically the cost — may put a damper on plans to set up a regional paramedic unit to give on-the-scene emergency medical treatment to victims in 10 area towns.

Right now, the three hospitals — Winchester Hospital, Lahey Clinic and Choate-Symmes — are feeling out officials in the area towns to discover their reaction to the plan. That is why Dr. Thomas Mulvaney of Winchester Hospital was before the Board of Selectmen last week.

"We're not coming to you for money to fund this now," Mulvaney told the selectmen. "This is to bring the concept of an Advanced Life Support System before the communities in which we expect it to work."

The concept is to provide on-the-scene medical treatment in cases where the victim is so seriously injured or ill that treatment cannot wait during the ambulance ride to the emergency room.

The Emergency Medical Technicians who staff Winchester's ambulance are only supposed to pick up accident victims and transport them as quickly as possible to the hospital.

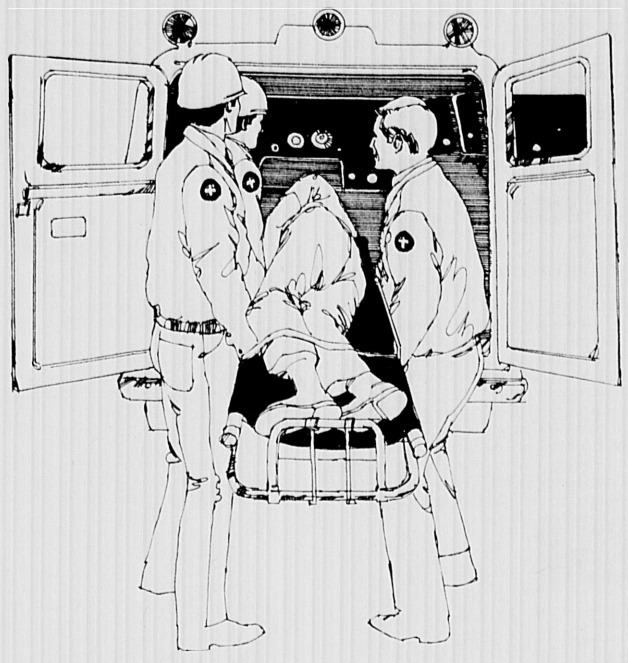
The paramedics who would be working under the hospitals' proposal would be able to start treatment at the accident scene, saving precious minutes.

"The EMTs are basically trained to 'pick up and run' safely — although they do good things in the field as far as splinting fractures and that sort of thing," explained Mulvaney.

"The paramedics would provide much of the initital care at the scene of the incident — inserting an endotrachial tube, starting the intravenous, administering drugs, doing electro-shock therapy for heart stoppage," Mulvaney said.

The paramedics would be directed by a doctor manning a radio at one of the three hospitals, Mulvaney said. They would man one ambulance, based at a central location, which would be sent out on calls from EMTs at the scene.

Therefore, continued Mulvaney, the local ambulance service and EMTs would have to continue their work, as they would be the first crew on the scene and the ones to decide whether to call for the paramedics or transport the patients themselves.



John Nash, who heads the Fire Department's ambulance service and is a paramedic himself, estimated 50 patients a year could use on-the-scene medical treatment. Mulvaney noted that after polling hospitals, he found that 10 patients a day in the 10 towns could use the care.

Selectmen had no qualms about agreeing that the Advanced Life Support System would be a marvelous addition to the town's emergency medical service. They just didn't want to have to pay for it.

Nash told the selectmen that even if the program could eventually support itself by charging fees for service, it would probably cost the town $26,000 to get the program off the ground. "I don't think that funding should come from the communities," he commented.

Mulvaney noted that the hospitals probably wouldn't pick up the cost either.

"In the same way the towns are faced with Proposition 2½, the hospitals are under a state-wide cap on costs," said Mulvaney. "It's not that easy to say to a hospital, 'Fund this.'

"We went to the boards of the three hospitals and asked them for $25,000 apiece. They said, 'No Way,'" added Mulvaney.

Nash told the selectmen that the hospitals "have to look for more unique ways of handling the funding." Selectmen agreed.

"You ought to continue investigating this and planning," Selectman Chairman Edward O'Connell told Mulvaney. "Hopefully, you can provide some vehicle for paying for this without us having to appropriate town funds.

"I could see this as being self-supporting eventually," added O'Connell. "But it may require some funds from the state to get it off the ground."

Patients Take Town For A Ride

The town has been unable to collect $24,000 in ambulance service bills, some dating back to 1976.

According to town Comptroller Al Faggiano, the town has been able to collect only 70 percent of the bills it sends out to patients who use the town ambulance.

"That's extremely low for this town, where we normally collect 99.99 to 100 percent of our property taxes," Faggiano told the Board of Selectmen last week.

"We've got a problem here," responded Selectmen Chairman Edward O'Connell. "This (the number of unpaid bills) is growing in a geometeric pattern that I find frightening."

O'Connell commented that "We may be forced to admit that many of these bills are uncollectable." But Selectman Alan Macdonald suggested that some of the money might be collected from the insurance companies.

Macdonald noted that the bills are sent to individuals, rather than the insurance companies, and those individuals may not know that their insurance will cover the ambulance call.

"Of the $24,000, I'm sure quite a lot is really owed to us by the insurance companies," said Macdonald. "We have to go straight to those insurance companies."

Faggiano said he knew of another community which sent ambulance bills directly to the insurance firms.

He suggested that the firefighters manning the ambulance get insurance policy numbers from patients, then bill the insurer directly.

But several hitches were forseen in that plan — Treasurer-Collector Carol Thomas noted the town would need an agreement with Blue Cross-Blue Shield, and Groux said the town might not want to take on "a whole new bureaucratic function."

Selectman Mark Lombardi liked the idea, however.

"You don't want to hold a person back and let them bleed to death, but you have got to get the provider numbers, bill them, and collect the money," he said.

Other suggestions were to hire a bill collection company, or at least send a notice with the bills telling patients to contact their insurance companies.

Selectmen told Groux, Thomas, Faggiano and Fire Chief Robert McElhinney to look into the problem and come back with a recommendation.

School Department Exceeds Budget

For the third year in a row, the Winchester School Dept. has outspent its legal budget.

The statutory limit for legal costs is $15,000 and this year the schools spent $21,951. The figure is actually lower than that of 1982, when total cost was $26,578, and the previous year's figure was $27,892.

Rather than approve the additional charges, Selectmen, who by law must approve additional spending, decided to wait and contact Assistant Supt. Jack Fallon and School Committee Chairman Constance Papas for an explanation.

"The time has come to get all the actors involved on stage," said Selectmen Chairman Edward O'Connell. "Having faced this situation one year ago, I can't help but wonder if it may be a shared problem of the school department and the legal firm."

Town Council Douglas Randall agreed that it was likely. "I'd assume the responsibility was largely shared by the legal firm," he said. "There has to be an explanation of what the school committee has been charged by the law firm. The firm runs the risk of doing its job and not being paid."

In a letter to the board, Fallon noted that the level of legal expense could not be known in advance. He apologized for not forewarning the board and pointed out that the costs had been aggressively controlled in a year of abnormally high special education hearings and appeals. He also cited extremely heavy arbitration expenses.

Selectman Michael Saraco moved to deny approval of the expenditure levels. "My feeling is that we should deny the approval for the additional legal costs," he said.

Selectman Alan Macdonald agreed. "We cannot approve this without an in-depth discussion of whether or not this is a legitimate request," he said. "It puts us in an embarassing situation. We need a meeting of the minds on this situation."

Tenant To Pay Town For Heating

Although the town must keep part of the second floor of the Waterfield rd. train station as a waiting room, the first and rest of the second floor are another story.

The Sachem Woods tenant which occupies the first floor must pay rent, heating and renovation costs, all of which Town Manager Thomas Groux will work out with them.

"The Sachem Woods Company who occupy the first floor want to renovate, and make $11,000 worth of improvements," Groux told the board of selectmen. "The tenant has been excellent, we're free to do what we want. I'd be willing to let him remain."

The selectmen were also willing, and they authorized Groux to make arrangements with the tenant for rent and heating costs.

"We took a look at comparable rents in the Center, which are wild and ranging," said Groux. "My recommendation is that the tenant pay $1,000 in rent and make renovations in the building at his own expense. We will negotiate heating costs later to determine if they will come out of the rent."

Groux said recent rentals in the Center have ranged from $6-$8 per square foot for vacant stores. He then explained how he arrived at the fee of $1,000 a month in rent. "Four dollars overall for an average of 30 square feet seems to be a fair return to the town at $12,000 a year," Groux told the board.

Groux suggested that Sachem Woods pay its own heating costs. "We have to heat the waiting room," he said. "So we could isolate their portion of the heat."

Selectman Mark Lombardi said it would be logical for Sachem Woods to provide their own heat. "There is a big if when you provide heat," he said. "You just don't know what the heat bills will be. But I don't think we're looking to make money on this deal.

Selectmen agreed to let Groux make the heating arrangements with Sachem Woods.

Police Log

Thursday, July 28

—An intruder ransacked a Polk rd. home, tearing the screen on a rear porch door to gain entrance. According to a report filed by Officer Theodore Yeanacopolis, a pane of glass in the rear door leading to the kitchen was also broken, and every drawer and cabinet in the house was pulled out and searched.

A Polk rd. neighbor reported that she saw a small gray car in the driveway of the ransacked home, and watched a dark-haired man of medium build in his 30s ring the doorbell, return to his car, and wait five minutes before leaving.

The residents were unable to determine if there were many missing items, because of the extensive ransacking of the home.

—Two vehicles were vandalized at Bonnell Ford on Cambridge st. There are no suspects, according to a report filed by Officer Steven Fields. A 1983 Ford Econoline van's right rear tire was punctured twice, and the right rear tire of a Ford F250 Pick-up truck

Two tires were flattened and a pane of glass was broken at the rear of a garage on Olive st. According to a report filed by Officer Jonathan Dean, an intruder apparently entered a home through the broken glass, opened cabinet drawers and moved items around. Nothing was reported missing, and no items appeared to have been taken. Another Olive st. garage was also broken into the same day, with no items reported missing.

Friday, July 29

—After reading a report in The Star that youths were arrested for breaking and entering into several Winchester motor vehicles, two more Winchester residents came forward and reported that their cars had been broken into.

A Lawson rd. resident reported that several items, including tools, a clock, and jumper cables, were taken from her car. The items were later returned by police.

A Wedgemere ave. resident reported that stolen seat covers were missing from her car. They were also returned

Saturday, July 30

—Officer James Gray reported seeing a 1967 Ford truck traveling north on Main st., being driven in a suspicious manner. According to Officer Gray's report, the man could not produce a license or registration when police stopped him and asked for one.

Police arrested the Medford man for operating an unregistered, uninsured vehicle without a license. The vehicle was impounded, as its ownership was unknown.

—Three members of a Winchester family were injured in an accident that occured on High st. and Cambridge st.

According to a report filed by Officer Lewis Best, Kenneth Foster was traveling north on Cambridge st. when his car collided with a Pontiac Firebird operated by a 45-year-old Pepper Hill dr. man as it crossed the intersection. Foster of Northboro, was cited for failure to stop at a red light.

The Pepper Hill dr. man complained of neck pain, and was treated at Winchester Hospital. The man's wife was administered first aid by police, before being transported to Winchester Hospital. She had visible signs of facial and mouth injuries, and complained of pain in her right side. Her 14-year-old, who was also taken to Winchester Hospital, complained of head and neck pain. All were treated and released.

Sunday, July 31

—A 19-year-old Vine st. man and a 20-year-old Main st. man were arrested for trespassing in the town's water supply at the middle reservoir of the Fells. According to a report filed by Officer Lewis Best, the men were standing at the water's edge in bathing suits when police arrested them.

Saturday, July 30

—Police arrested an Everett man after they discovered he was wanted for an outstanding warrant from the Everett Police. According to a report filed by Officer David Poole, a 22-year-old Everett man was heading south on Wildwood st. at an excessive rate of speed. He was stopped and issued a citation for speeding and operating an unregistered vehicle. At that time, police discovered that the man was wanted for an outstanding warrant.

—The investigation of two unregistered and uninsured motor vehicles on James st. led police to arrest a 21-year-old Winchester man who was wanted on an outstanding warrant from the Gloucester Police Dept. for using a motor boat without authority and doing wanton damage to property.

According to a report filed by Officer Fred Camman, the resident was moving one of the unregistered vehicles off of James st. when police placed him under arrest.

—A Border rd. home was broken into when an intruder removed a pane of glass from the bathroom window at the rear of the house to gain entrance. The intruder ransacked every room. A stereo system and speakers were reported stolen, according to a report filed by Officer Theodore Yeanocopolis.

The resident later discovered that his 1982 Mazda was missing from the garage. Both the car and the garage were locked, and police were not sure how the intruder gained entry.

Town Adopts Fire Fees

The town hopes to raise $11,000 in revenues as a result of the new fire fee schedules introduced by Fire Chief Robert McElhinney.

The new fees, approved by the board of selectmen on Monday night, are a result of the fire department's involvement with activities beyond firefighting — such as scale drawings of building plans and the installation of fire alarm systems.

Although there used to be no charge for services such as a site plan review or the inspection of sprinkler systems, many communities have begun to charge fees for services rendered since the Propostion 2.5 tax limitation law went into effect.

"I believe the new fee schedule will help us keep step with communities around us," McElhinney told the board. "Forty percent of the communities around us probably have one."

Selectman Alan Macdonald said he recognized the need for the fees. "I think it's a very reasonable fee schedule, and we have to recognize the movement for fees when services are rendered."

McElhinney presented the board with a request for the new fee schedule on July 19, and the board asked him to be more definitive about the charges. McElhinney responded with a detailed fee schedule, that he resubmitted before the board Monday night.

According to McElhinney's report, the new fees which will be effective Sept. 1 will include a charge of $10 for permits, issued for oil burner installation, storage of flammable fluids, solids or gases, supervised display of fireworks, installation of liquified petroleum tanks and removal of underground gasoline tanks.

Ten dollars will also be charged for blasting of rock, a certificate of approval of flammable fluid tank trucks, the storing of gunpowder and small ammunition, and the use of tar kettles.

A fee of $2 will be charged for the keeping, sale and use of model rocket engines.

Copies of fire reports will now cost $5 each, and site plan reviews will be $25. Other fees include a charge of $75 for the testing and inspection of fire pumps at their installation, as well as stand pipes and sprinkler systems, and a charge of $10 for the inspection of the installation of fire alarm systems in one- and two-family homes. The prices will vary accordingly for multi-family dwellings.

Artist Donovan Wins Nationwide Contest

Cong. Edward J. Markey has announced that David Donovan of Lebanon st., a 1983 graduate of Winchester High School, has been named the Seventh District winner of the second annual congressional art competition.

The nationwide contest, "An Artist Discovery," was initiated by the U.S. House of Representatives last year to encourage and draw attention to the creative talents of America's young artists.

Later this summer, Donovan's winning entry will be put on display at the Capitol in Washington, D.C., where it will join the other winning entries from throughout the U.S.

Donovan's artwork, entitled "The Desperate One," is a black and white print of a pine woodcut.

Donovan said his artwork is a self-portrait representing himself as an old man. The portrait depicts the downgraded side of society, reflecting depression, tiredness, and unemployment, according to Donovan.

While at Winchester High School, Donovan was a member of the language and acting clubs, as well as a participant in student government. He enjoys drawing and writing in his spare time.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Simon J. Donovan, David plans to enter New York University in September, where he will major in liberal arts and minor in art.

The judge of the competition, Florence Smith Silverman, a well-known North Shore artist and member of the Winthrop Art Assn., reviewed many entries from throughout the Seventh District.

Silverman said that Donovan's portrait displayed the feelings of depression and tiredness very well. "The artwork was absolutely terrific in that it got to the true feelings."

Silverman pointed out that although she was very impressed by the other entries, Donovan's piece of artwork was exceptional because it is a woodcut. "A woodcut is a tricky process involving several steps after making the first print."

Since it was not a one step process, Donovan's work was more difficut to make than the other entries, according to Silverman. Silverman who has participated in many art exhibitions, said she views Donovan's artwork as an extremely mature piece for a high school student. "His talent is something which will be with him all the time."

Winchester ABC Program Gives Urban Minorities Top Schooling Here

When "Bill" left his home in a poor, black section of Cleveland, for Winchester, it seemed like the perfect opportunity for him to obtain a strong, quality education.

Yet Bill's first days in Winchester under the auspices of the ABC (A Better Chance) program did not turn out to be easy. "He was miserable when he first came here," says Sandy Thompson, at the time Community Relations Chairperson for ABC, a national, non-profit organization which provides academically talented minority students with an outstanding secondary school away from their home district.

"He had a hard time adjusting to rules and regulations," Thompson says. "He had a rough first year." A drop in grades did not help. To complicate matters Bill broke his leg while playing basketball, which, in some respects, may have been a turning point. "It helped to open his eyes to see how much caring there was," Thompson says.

"By the time he left Winchester he had a tremendous sense of appreciation for the school, for the town, and for the people who had been involved with him," Thompson says." He had matured tremendously and is now doing well in his second year at college. Our experience with this student was enough to keep us going with ABC for another ten years."

ABC was started in 1963 at Dartmouth by a group of independent school headmasters interested in increasing minority enrollments at their campuses. Minority students, generally black and hispanic, who apply to participate in the program must be in the top 10 percent of their classes, have good references, and be highly motivated.

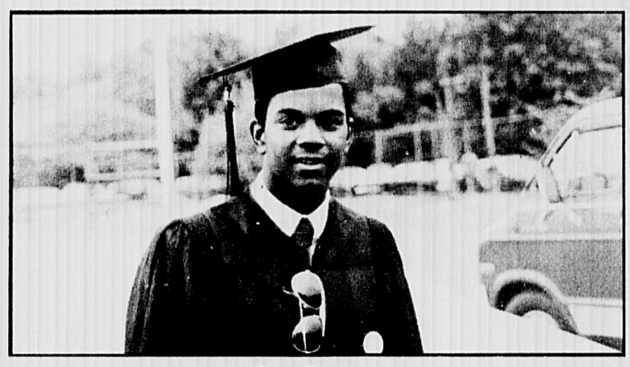
In addition to providing minority students with a solid secondary school education, ABC hopes that the students will continue their education in college and eventually assume positions of leadership wherever they settle. According to the National office of ABC in Boston, the record of achievement is impressive.

Although the students must be of high academic caliber within their home district, a different environment can contribute to advancing their education .

Winchester High School is one of 23 public schools with ABC programs, but the total number of member schools has reached 173, including independent boarding schools, independent day schools, and public schools. The system, which began with only 23 schools, now receives more than 2100 applications for 500 openings each year, according to Margot Bixby at the National office.

The program in Winchester began in 1970. Local resident Bonnie Holmes heard a presentation on ABC while attending a summer program at Dartmouth. She brought the idea to the Ecumenical Association. "Within a breathtakingly short time," she recounts, "people from all parts of the community were working together to make it happen."

In the intervening 13 years, 36 students have graduated from Winchester High School. Colleges they have attended include Dartmouth, Harvard, Swarthmore, Haverford, University of Pennsylvania, Wesleyan, Manhattanville, Vanderbilt, University of Wisconsin, Knox, Antioch, Tufts and Syracuse. According to Bixby, "The community of Winchester has been exemplary in demonstrating its commitment to the goals of the ABC program through its consistently strong broad-based financial and volunteer leadership support."



Sean Barnare

'The community of Winchester has been exemplary in demonstrating its commitment to the goals of the ABC program through its consistently strong broad-based financial and volunteer leadership support.'

The young men in the Winchester program live together during the school year at 2 Dix st. under the supervision of a resident director. This year there are 10; two freshmen, two sophomores, three juniors, and three seniors. Although the Winchester program is all male, there are ABC programs for young women in other areas.

Resident Director Mary Jo Nealon is just starting her sixth year. She oversees the running of the house, communicates with the students' parents, works closely with the board of directors, and is, basically, an invaluable asset to the Winchester ABC program.

Why are the students required to live at the house instead of with local families? "The main reason, as I understand it," says Nealon, "is that the students themselves are their own support system. They come to us at a young age, and they come to us in a new setting, and they support each other, and provide that support system that, in some small way, takes the place of their own families."

"They are their little community," Nealon says," and none of us know what it's like to be an ABC student in Winchester, Massachusetts, but they are all going through the same experience together. And they really do support each other."

Each student also has a host family. "The host family does provide a family setting for them to be in," says Nealon. "And the idea of the host family is to provide some kind of contact on an individual basis and get the student out of the house, which everyone needs from time to time."

The students usually go to the host family's home once a week, often for Sunday dinner, and generally spend one weekend each month there. The host parents try to represent the student's own family at sporting events, awards ceremonies, and school open house.

"Each student comes up for a spring visit," Nealon says," to provide information so that student can make a decision whether or not to come to Winchester. He goes to school for the day, meets with a guidance counselor and makes up a plan of study for the year. He sees what it's like to go to a family's house for a visit. They do chores on Saturday. We feel it's very important to give the students as much information as possible before he signs on the dotted line, so to speak."

Students take a regular course load at the high school, where the administration and faculty have been very supportive.

A board of directors, with Carolyn Ward in the position of president, governs every aspect of the local program, including fundraising and student admissions. Funds are raised to pay for operating expenses including housing, food, transportation and maintenance. The current 144,000 budget comes solely from the Winchester community.

Major fundraising comes from the spring concert and fall yard sales, as well as solicitations of individuals and organizations. This year the fall event, scheduled for October 15, will be a 50s dance, according to president Ward.

The people of Winchester are the people that keep the program going. "The people who volunteer for the different positions on the board and talk to me in their capacity are outstanding people," says Nealon. "They take the whole thing very seriously. Everyone's a volunteer, but when you look at what it takes throughout the year to keep the program going on the part of the volunteers, it's really a phenomenal effort."

For this year, Ward sees an expanded volunteer tutorial program. "Last year we had an experimental program with residents of the community signing up for tutoring at night with breathtaking success," she says. "The students enjoyed the residents coming to the house, and there was an improvement in grades. They have had regular study hall schedule, and the volunteers can sign up months ahead of time."

"The beauty of having so many people involved in this program is that hopefully there will be a place somewhere where the student will be able to relate to someone in a positive way and feel comfortable," says Nealon. "We need to have people involved in the program, because that's what makes it work."

Newport

Popular Playground Even More Popular This Year With 25th Defense Of America's Cup

Newport is almost too good to be true. Especially this year.

The Rhode Island resort has so much to offer the summer tourist every year it is hard to believe one year could be better than any other. But this year marks the 25th defense of the America's Cup, the premiere sail racing event in the world.

As a result, more than 3½ million tourists are expected to flock to the coastal resort over the three months of racing, bringing more than $50 million into city and state coffers.

The America's Cup trials began on June 18 with a record number of seven foreign boats from five countries vying for the opportunity to challenge the United States representative for the coveted trophy. Three American yachts are competing for the defender's role. By Sept. 8, both the defender and challenger will be named and the best four-out-of-seven series will begin on Sept. 13.

While the America's Cup competition is the biggest event of the summer in Newport, it isn't the only show in town, not by a long shot.

Newport has always been known as a top-notch spot for excellent ocean swimming, sunning, shopping, dining, drinking and partying. Now, with the addition of new stores and restaurants along the waterfront, that reputation has been enhanced many times over.

And then there are the dozens of Gilded Age mansions dominating the seacoast, the cliff walk along the craggy shores of the Atlantic and the countless historic sites and museums in and around town.

But mansions and beaches and bars aside, the main action this year centers around the toughest America's Cup competition in decades. For the last 132 years — the longest winning streak in sports history — the United States has held what is considered to be the crown jewel of yacht racing. In each of the previous 24 challenges dating back to 1870, the American entry has easily repelled all challengers. But a change in the rules, lifting the restriction that foreign boats use only technology and materials available in their own country, has allowed the challengers to become more competitive and has prompted a record number of challengers to enter the race. And they are doing it with a vengeance — the challengers have spent a record $42 million for a shot at the Cup, outspending the Americans by an almost five to one margin.

The America's Cup wasn't always the America's Cup, however. As a part of the first World's Fair held in England in 1851, the British challenged the Americans to a yachting race that included 14 other vessels from around the world. The U.S. entry, "America," handily defeated her competitors in the race around the Isle of Wight and took home the 100 guinea cup.

Six years later, the owners of "America" deeded the cup to the New York Yacht Club with the condition that the club place it forever in international competition.

While the cup has been in international competition now for 132 years, making it the world's oldest sporting trophy in competition, the United States has run up a streak of wins unparalleled in sports history. Until, perhaps, this year.

The possibility of such an upset and the always colorful brouhaha surrounding the America's Cup has brought tourists to Newport in droves to watch the qualifying matches. The races go off almost daily with as many as three a day, all dependent on the weather. There are several companies which run boats into Rhode Island Sound to watch the competition and tickets, at least for the preliminary races, are easy to obtain.

Many area travel agencies have chartered buses to Newport and have obtained tickets on observation boats for the semi-finals and finals.

As exciting as the races will be, a visitor cannot spend all day on the water. One of the most popular sightseeing activities is the tour of the mansions, visited by more than three-quarters of a million people a year.

Each of the lavish mansions, most of which were built around the turn of the century, seemed to be an effort to outdo the others. The Marble House, for exam-

Montreal

You Can Go Continental Without Having To Go Overseas

Want to go somewhere "foreign," not too far, where the dollar is strong, a place that combines old-world charm and modern hotels and shopping — above and below ground?

Just get on the Interstate and head north. Montreal, Canada, is waiting for you.

Regardless of the season, Montreal has something to offer the tourist, from its 2,000 restaurants, to its ethnic neighborhoods, to its unique shops, to its wide variety of cultural activities.

Take Old Montreal, a 12-block area where the city began in 1642. Here the tourist on foot can see Notre Dame Church, which rivals the cathedrals of Europe; Chateau de Ramezay, the 1705 residence of the French governors; and the 17th century Bonsecours Church, as well as the Musee du Chateau Ramezay, the Maison du Calvet and Place Jacques-Cartier.

Eating Out

You'd have to stay for weeks to enjoy all of Montreal's eating places. While the French cuisine is predominant, there are many other ethnic, seafood and steak restaurants to suit any palate. Many restaurants are on Saint-Denis, Prince-Arthur and Duluth sts.

Among the top restaurants in the city are the Beaver Club at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, which features a six-course "menu de degustation," St. Amable in Old Montreal, Les Halles, and restaurants at the major hotels.

Those who want to try typical Quebecois fare of hearty pea soup, tourtiere (pork filled meat pie) and rich maple desserts or fruit pies can try Auberge le Vieux St. Gabriel and Les Filles du Roy, both in Old Montreal.

Shopping

In the heart of the downtown are Montreal's major department stores: Ogilvy's, Simpsons's, Eaton's and the Baie, on St. Catherine st. West. Holt Renfrew is on Sherbrooke st. West.

Montreal also has sophisticated boutiques underground, such as Place Ville-Marie, and above-ground. Right now English woolens and cashmeres are good buys, as well as porcelain and crystal. French fashions are cheaper than in the U.S.

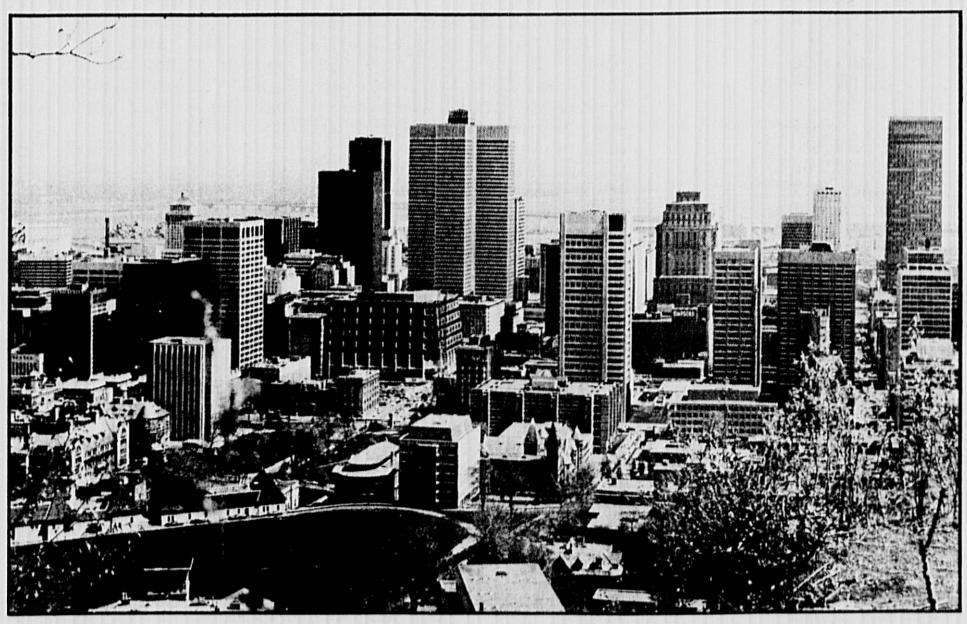
The U.S. dollar enjoys a premium of about 15 to 17 percent over Candian dollars. American money is accepted, but it is to the American visitor's advantage to exchange his money for Canadian dollars.

Tourists interested in native crafts should visit two artisans' cooperatives which feature woodcarving, jewelry, woven articles, pottery, rugs and other handwork. They are: The Centrale d' Artisanat du Quebec at 1450 St. Denis st. and the Canadian Guild of Crafts at 2025 Peel st. On your way out of the ciy, there is the duty-free shop at the airport. Major stores are closed on Sundays.

Getting Around

Montreal's Metro is worth a ride just to see it. It is modern, quiet and free of graffiti. Each of its 54 stations has been decorated by a different artist. Getting around Montreal by bus and Metro is easy.

The Metro connects some of Montreal's eight-mile underground which includes nearly 1,000 boutiques, two railway stations, bus terminal, eight hotels, a hundred restaurants, art galleries, the Olympic Park, parking areas and other services, as well as above-ground sights.



A number of bus and boat tours of the city are available. The bus tours, particularly, help acquaint the tourist with the city's layout and main sights and are good for general orientation.

Places To Go

Montreal has numerous museums, galleries, and historical buildings. There are concerts, plays, ballet and pop artist performances. The Place des Arts is home of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra.

The botanical garden is rated third in the world, and is easy to reach by bus or Metro. A mini-train gives tours of the grounds. Open daily is Planetarium Dow at Square Chaboillez. The Alcan Aquarium is on Ile Sainte-Helene in the La Ronde amusement park which features 40 rides.

Those who missed the 1976 Summer Olympics can visit the Olympic Park where tours can include a swim, meal and other activities if advance arrangements are made. During the summer Ile Notre-Dame is a floral park, with some "Man and His World" exhibitions from Expo 67 on display.

Cultural events include the symphony, the Les Grand Ballets Candiens, the Opera de Montreal and more than 25 professional French and English theater companies. Organ recitals are given on the Notre-Dame Basilica Casavant organ. There are annual film and jazz festivals. Rock concerts are scheduled throughout the year at the Forum and Theatre Saint-Denis.

To relax, visitors can enjoy the vista from Mount Royal, the city park-mountain from which the downtown and Vermont's Green Mountains are visible.

Other places to visit include the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, Old Fort Sainte-Helene with 17th century reenactments and the Jardins des Merveilles miniature zoo at La Fontaine Park.

Sports fans can time their visits for the annual Players International Tennis Championships, the September Montreal Marathon, hockey games with the Canadiens, baseball with the Expos, football with the Concordes, soccer with the Manic, and Grand Prix racing.

There are plenty of opportuinities for one to participate in sports, such as skiing in the nearby Laurentians, and cycling tours.

The Montreal tourist office advises visitors that they should allow three days to see the city, but clearly one could spend much more time than that getting to know one of North America's most interesting cities.

A Call For Stories

This week, we are beginning an experimental travel section to see if there is an interest among our readers for articles about travel to places near and far.

Part of the new section may include stories by or about our readers who have been to interesting places. If you or someone you know has a good travel story to tell, call the paper and ask for John Wilpers, Executive Editor.

Baggage To The Sky

By TERRY MAROTTA

I saw this truck on the turnpike yesterday, hauling its cargo across the commonwealth like any other truck you're likely to see on that road.

This one was different, though, in that it carried two separate and distinct products, both of which were named, pictured, and described in bold letters on the truck's flanks.

One product was luggage and the other was caskets. Suitcases and coffins were what this company made.

Now there's no reason, I suppose, why these two items shouldn't be made by the same company. I realize that any manufacturing firm worth its salt is always seeking to diversify, and to develop new markets. My husband works for a company that fabricates foam into various shapes, and you'd be amazed to learn how many things are made of it: not just sponges and furniture cushions, but toys, sound systems, helmets and inner soles.

Wherever we go, I find him sidling up to some improbable item, fingering it, and muttering "We made that," more to himself than to anyone else. I mean WHEREVER we go: airplanes, bathrooms, sports arenas. The world is evidently loaded with foam; most of creation appears to be made out of it. I wouldn't be surprised if, when he goes to glory, the autopsy were found to reveal that my husband too is made of the stuff.

Which brings us back neatly, if in a rather roundabout, not to say morbid, way, to our original subject here: my discovery that the people who make my suitcases are the same ones who may have already fashioned my casket.

This was a shocking discovery to me, as I think it would be to anyone. You just don't normally think of these two items as being in the same category.

They're both containers, certainly, and the more I dwell on the idea, the more similar they actually seem to be.

They're apt to have the same satiny quilted linings, for one thing. The inside of caskets always look so pretty with those linings, like fancy boxes of Valentine's Day chocolates, or like wonderfully soft beds, all plump and pillowy. Maybe suitcases are insulated with the very scraps and remnants from the casket-lining end of this unusual company. The possibility never dawned on me before yesterday. What a notion! That thought will be with me from this point forward, whenever I lay my clothing to rest in an overnight bag. I may find myself saying a little prayer over my things, as I pack the shirts in there, face up and arms crossed peacefully at the wrists.

Then too, they're both designed to carry goods to a certain destination, caskets and suitcases are, and that's why they have handles. Caskets, of course, are far more difficult to actually carry. Picture O. J. Simpson trying to spring his way through a crowded airport with a casket under his arm. No, caskets, generally, are moved along on little wheeled devices. Come to think of it, that's probably where the suitcase end of the company got the relatively new idea of attaching wheels to the undersides of luggage: From their brothers in the casket division!

I suppose both containers have to be tough and lasting, too — not to mention leak-proof and designed with a tamper-resistant lock. It's hard to say which of the two would require the greater durability: caskets, one would guess, since they not only have to last til the Judgment Day, but they need to withstand the weight of all the earth, as well.

But then, caskets don't get thrown around much, on the other hand, or slammed down a chute onto a baggage carousel, or, thank the lord, jumped on by gorillas like in the commercial. Still, there's no doubt about it: both products need to be tough.

This subject holds a real fascination for me, I'm finding, the more time I spend thinking about it.

That truck was a messenger from beyond, a real source of inspiration to me.

So suitcases and caskets are cousins then.

Caskets, those symbols of loss and mourning, those partners to the urn and the funeral wreath, are merely heavier and slightly swankier forms of luggage.

And if caskets are only suitcases writ large, then we who lie down in them are like articles of clothing, I guess — packed in there and then transported from a point of departure to a destination as yet undisclosed.

At which place we'll move through a cosmic baggage claim, and, far from being jumped on by gorillas or given rough handling, we'll find outselves claimed by the Person who packed us in the first place; claimed, and carefully taken out and aired, our wrinkles shaken out of us, and our journey at an end.

Now there's a thought to carry a person down the turnpike of life!

Beacon Hill Roll Call

The House and Senate are now meeting informally during the summer legislative break. Formal sessions are scheduled to begin again the week after Labor Day in September.

During the first seven months of the session, the legislature has acted on thousands of the more than 8000 bills filed for consideration in 1983. Only a handful of these bills have made it through the complicated process in both branches and have been signed by Gov. Dukakis. Even fewer have been approved on roll call votes in both branches.

This week, "the report" updates action on key measures and records local representatives' and senators' votes on these measures which were approved by roll call votes in both the Senate and House and signed into law by Gov. Dukakis.

SUPERFUND (H 1503): Approved by House 136-0, Senate 35-0, and signed into law by Gov. Dukakis on March 24 was the $25 million superfund for the cleanup of hazardous waste sites in the state. The bill gives the state strong powers to sue violators and establishes stiff jail sentences and fines for violators.

A "Yea vote is for the bill.

Rep. Sherman Saltmarsh voted yes. Sen Richard Kraus voted yes.

GAS TAX (S 1889): Approved by House 85-57, Senate 19-13, and signed into law on March 30 was the bill establishing a floor of 11 cents on the gasoline tax effective April 1. The tax is pegged at 10 percent of the wholesale price of gas and at the time the bill passed the tax totalled 9.9 cents per gallon.

A "Yea" vote is for the 11 cent floor. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh voted no, Kraus yes.

SUPPLEMENTAL BUDGET (S 1890): Approved by House 132-4, Senate 29-1, was a $36 million supplemental budget for fiscal 1983. Included was $34 million for college scholarship aid.

A "Yea" vote is for the budget. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh and Kraus voted yes.

RACING (H 2306): House approved 128-18 and the Senate 30-5 refused to table a bill allowing race tracks in the state to televise and sponsor betting on up to five "highly recognized" national races annually. The Senate later passed the bill, without a roll call vote and Gov. Dukakis signed it on May 19.

In the House a "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it. In the Senate a "Yea" vote is for tabling the bill. A "Nay" vote is against tabling.

Saltmarsh voted yes. Kraus no.

LOCAL AID (H 6042): Approved by House 113-32, Senate 20-14, were resolutions expressing the intent of the legislature to provide $157.8 million in additional local aid to cities and towns in fiscal 1984. The final fiscal 1984 budget approved a few days ago actually contained $159 million in new local aid.

A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions. A "Nay" vote is against them.

Saltmarsh voted no, Kraus yes.

REAP (H 6440): House approved 84-66, Senate approved 22-12, and Dukakis signed July 1, the Revenue Enforcement and Protection (REAP) package. Included were a 5 cent hike in the cigarette excise tax; a hike from 4.3 to 5.75 percent in the capital gains tax; and a .2 percent payroll tax hike on employers.

A "Yea" vote is for the REAP package. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh voted no, Kraus yes.

FISCAL 1984 BUDGET (H 6500): House approved 129-23, Senate approved 34-3, and Dukakis signed July 15, the $7.26 billion fiscal 1984 budget. The package is about 6 percent more than last year's budget.

A "Yea" vote is for the budget. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh and Kraus voted yes.

This State House report updates action on bills which were approved in either the House or Senate on a roll call vote and then signed into law by Gov. Dukakis. Bills listed here which were approved in one branch on a roll call vote were OK'd in the other branch on a voice vote or standing vote.

NORTHERN IRELAND (S 1840): Approved by House 136-2 and signed by Gov. Dukakis on April 4 was a bill terminating the investment of public pension funds in firms contributing to the oppression in Northern Ireland.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Rep. Sherman Saltmarsh voted yes.

LIBRARY RECORDS (H 4606): Approved by House 114-24 and signed by Gov. Dukakis on May 23 was a bill making public library circulation records which reveal the identity of a borrower confidential.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh voted no.

DEFICIENCY BUDGET (S 2001): Approved by House 141-1 and signed by Gov. Dukakis on May 19 was a $22.5 million supplemental fiscal 1983 budget. The measure included $2.6 million to fund legislative, judicial, and executive pay hikes approved last year: $4.1 million for snow removal costs; and $228,000 to fund the governor's office for the rest of the fiscal year.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh voted yes.

DEFICIENCY BUDGET (H 6532): Approved by House 133-21 and signed by Gov. Dukakis on June 29 was a $28.4 million supplemental budget for fiscal 1983 drafted by a House-Senate conference committee after each branch had approved different versions. Included is $1,020,000 for counsel to indigents and $500,000 for furniture and equipment for Bristol Court.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh voted yes.

LAYOFFS (H 6485): Approved by House 121-6 and signed by Governor Dukakis on July 26 was the bill crediting police and firefighters laid off in 1981 and 1982 and rehired, with active service and all the benefits for their layoff period.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh voted yes.

DEFICIENCY BUDGET (H 6579): Approved by House 91-33 was the Senate version of a $22.8 million supplemental budget for fiscal 1983. Included is $200,000 for the promotion of tourism and the tall ships; $75,000 to advance foreign trade; and $50,000 for a study of voter registraiton. Governor Dukakis signed the bill on July 19 after vetoing several sections.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Saltmarsh voted no.

CHILD ABUSE (S 2064): Approved by the Senate 33-0 and signed by Governor Dukakis on July 14 was this complicated and lengthy bill dealing with reporting cases of child abuse. The key section requires the Department of Social Services (DSS) to notify district attorneys of child abuse cases involving rape, sexual exploitation, brain damage, and serious bodily injury as well as cases involving death. Under the previous law, only cases involving death were required to be reported.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Sen. Richard Kraus voted yes.

INSURANCE CHANGES (S 2098): Approved by Senate 32-1 and signed by Governor Dukakis on July 7 was the controversial bill making major changes in the Massachusetts auto insurance system. The bill replaces the current high risk facility with a new association and provides that only bad drivers in the association pay higher rates. It also defines poor and unsafe drivers, sets higher rates for them, and uses the increased revenue to reduce the rates that good drivers will pay. Another key section repeals a previous law requiring insurance companies to sell all coverages to every driver.

A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it.

Magic And Mime Workshop Held

July 25 through 29 was the week of magic and mime for the Winchester Recreation Dept.'s mini-campers. Laura Sheppard, a mime performer, and Dario Pittiori, a magician, both of Boston, conducted a workshop for the mini-campers.

Highlights of the workshop included Dario astounding the participants with his magic. Dario also taught the mini-campers how to make their own illusions and create their own magic. Some tricks that the mini-campers learned were making animals out of handkerchiefs, paper tricks, rope tricks, and card tricks. For participants really interested in magic, Dario taught them the principles of balancing objects and juggling. Once Dario divulged his secrets, juggling did not seem so hard to tackle.

Laura Sheppard introduced the group to many facts of mime. The mime workshop included participants exercising isolated muscles of the body as their warm up. After the warm-ups, participants were involved in exercises that allowed them to make a variety of faces. Also, participants learned how to walk without really moving. The mini-campers were also involved in theater games where they could shed all of their inhibitions and take on the personality of a performer.

To culminate the week of hard work, the mini-campers put on a show for the community of Winchester. In the show, the participants were able to surprise and astound their friends and family by creating illusions in their magic tricks and by telling stories in mime. To conclude the show, Dario surprised the audience by pulling a rabbit out of a hat.

It was a msytical show that participants and guests thoroughly enjoyed.

Applications Due On Aug. 13 For Practical Nurse Program

The Northeast Metropolitan Regional Vocational School's Practical Nursing Program is now accepting applicants for a late September starting date.

Interested students should pick up an application package at the school's main office, or call the school and request that the application package be mailed. To be eligible, students must, at a minimum, possess a high school diploma or equivalent, and satisfy other admissions criteria.

The application deadline has been set for Saturday, Aug. 13, at 9 a.m. at which time the Allied Health Entrance Examination prepared by the Psychological Corporation will be administered by the Northeast nursing staff. This examination will be held in the Cafetorium at the school on Hemlock rd., Wakefield. Applications received after this date will be placed on a waiting list.

This upcoming one-year Practical Nurse Program is being offered as a result of a funding contract with the Melrose-Wakefield Hospital and the U.S. Army Reserves. This funding arrangement will enable the program to continue on a tuition-free basis. Students will be responsible for expenses such as books, uniforms, transportation and meals. This will bring the cost of the program for students to approximately $400-$500.

The Practical Nurse Program will use Melrose-Wakefield Hospital for its medical-surgical and maternity experience, and continue to use the North Shore Childrens' Hospital in Salem for a four-week pediatric rotation. Classes in theory will be held at Northeast Regional Vocational School in Wakefield.

Gerard P. Donahoe, Winchester's elected representative on the District School Committee, chaired a subcommittee which worked over the past several months with the school administration, headed by Thomas F. Markham Jr., superintendent-director; William J. Hegarty, associate executive director, Melrose-Wakefield Hospital; and Maj. Joseph Sullivan, U.S. Army Reserves; to accomplish this unique collaborative, whereby a public school facility will offer a program with funding support from both the private sector and the military.

Petticoat Race Held At WBC

On a recent Sunday afternoon the horn blasted for the annual Petticoat Race at Winchester Boat Club. The skipper of each boat must be female.

Twenty-one boats arrived on the starting line to find that the light winds had died. The winds did pick up in time to make the race enjoyable for all participants. Finishing in the top five were, in order: Jennifer Rousmaniere skipper, Marta Sartori, crew, Tina Noordzij as skipper, husband Maarten crew, Caroline Wilk skipper, Jack Gannon, crew. Mary Williamson skipper, husband Dick crew. Jayne Brady skipper, father Bill crew.

Cocktails were served at the home of Alda Tully and were followed by a covered casserole dinner and awarding of trophies at the club.

Jennifer Rousmaniere was the first recipient of the Petticoat Race Trophy instituted this year. Like most of the perpetual trophies awarded by the WBC this award was a silver pitcher very astute businessman, and would have been a good person to have in the center." He added, "I'm disappointed that he changed his mind in that sense that we want business investment to go along with our revitalization project, but I'm not discouraged." Connery felt that Oram may reconsider late but he could not say for sure.

When Oram first made his proposal, he said he was planning a restaurant with a dining room capable of seating 120 people. He had also hoped to use the Winchester Terrace courtyard as a seasonal outdoor seating area for another 20 to 25 persons.

The idea, as he put it, was to create a restaurant where, "anyone in town can come in and be comfortable." He had added, "A person would be able to order full dinners, like steak and veal, but at the same time, a family would be able to come in for what we call 'fun food' like tacos and nachos."

Also included in his proposal was a semi-open kitchen area of 'grill room' that would seat about 30 patrons. This area would include a small bar and would be set off from the other sections of the restaurant.

As he described it, "You would come in, sit at a bar, and see anything from a burger to a steak being grilled. It would be ideal for people who are single and casually dressed. They could eat and drink without having to sit in the dining room where they might not be as comfortable."

In this way, Oram felt the restaurant would resemble another establishment on Newbury st. in Boston run by the Magic Pan Company, where he was working as a district manager. This venture in Winchester, however, would have been his own.

pened. They should have one or the whole thing will go under. No one even knows who is in charge at a burial," he exclaimed.

O'Connell said that he wanted Dom Serratore who as head of Public Works is in charge of cemetery maintenance, to be present when the issue of a superintendent is discussed at a later time. "We can't discuss personalities tonight," he told the committee, after they suggested that cemetery foreman Harold Moran be appointed.

"The selection and appointment of personnel is a decision that I make with the DPW director," Town Manager Thomas Groux reminded the committee. "If the cemetery continues without delegated responsibility, I'm going to make an appointment.

Ryerson reminded the board that the budget put in by Town Manager Groux a year ago provided a secretary, who staffs the office at Wildwood Cemetery five days a week. "It's working out quite well," said Ryerson. "When she isn't there, an answering machine takes the phone calls. Also, this spring the cemetery never looked better and we heard a lot about it from residents."

In regard to the charter change, Ryerson told the selectmen that the committee wasn't looking for any kind of special power.

"We just want direction in how you want the place run," he said.

OConnell said that the board would discuss both the charter change and the possibility of a new superintendent on Aug. 15.

★Newport

ple, cost a total of $11 million to build in 1892. Parties at the extravagant homes cost as much as $200,000.

But the Gilded Age of Newport ended with the Depression and today only a few of the mansions remain in private hands. Six of the best, fortunately for the public, have been acquired by the Preservation Society of Newport County and are open to the public from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day, with night hours on varying days at five of the homes. Admission at each mansion runs to $2 or so for adults and less than half that for children.

Another popular daytime activity is ocean swimming at three of the most beautiful beaches in New England. The water is warm, unlike the chilly ocean around Boston, and children and adults alike can spend hours in the water instead of minutes. The three beaches, known as First, Second and Third beaches, all tend to be crowded, so arrive early. There is public parking at each with fees running around $5. Bathhouses are also available at each with fees charged for admission.

Judging by the numbers of people involved, the most popular event in all of Newport, including the yacht races, has to be eating and drinking. The crews of the yachts mix with spectators in what is one of the largest unorganized parties in New England. Virtually every night of the summer brings throngs to the waterfront for everything from a cheap but delicious chowder meal to a deluxe French meal at a deluxe (and very expensive) French restaurant. The opportunities for spending money on food and drink are almost limitless.

Some of the best restaurants for lunch and dinner include: Barclay's at 30 Memorial blvd., The Black Pearl on Bannister's Wharf, the Clarke Coke House also on Bannister Wharf, Frick's at 673 Thames st., The Inn at Castle Hill on Ocean dr. (a particularly stunning place, especially at sunset), La Petite Auberge at 19 Charles st., The Mooring on Sayer's Wharf, the Wharf Delicatessen on Bowen's Wharf, the White Horse Tavern at Marlborough and Farewell sts., Cafe Zelda at 528 Thames st.

For breakfast, some of the best spots are the Croissant at Christie's Landing, the Island Omelette Shoppe at 1 Farewell st., Newport's Upper Crust at the Brick Market Place.

And for nightlife, some of the premiere spots to hit are The Candy Store in the Clarke Cook House on Bannister's Wharf, The Club at 3 Pelham st., Dave and Eddie's on America's Cup ave., the Greenhouse at 30 Wave ave., and The Rhumbline at 62 Bridge st.

Newport Travel Tips

How To Get There

From Boston, Newport is linked with Routes 114 and 138. Route 114 ties into I-95 which passes through Providence; Route 138 eventually hooks up with Route 24 which leads to Boston. The nearest train depot is in Providence, not far from the bus station where buses make regular 45-minute trips to Newport. The nearest airport is in Warwick, R.I., where you can rent a car, hop a commuter flight to Newport's small state airport, or hire a limo or taxi to drive you to Providence for the bus connection. Travelling by car is obviously the easiest method until you get to Newport where traffic is almost always snarled and parking is at a premium.

What To Wear

Despite Newport's reputation as a hang-out for the elite, dress there is surprisingly casual. Some of the better restaurants require a jacket and tie as do some of the special music festival concerts. But virtually everywhere else, dress is informal. During the daytime, shorts or jeans and T-shirts (many of the designer variety) seem to be the uniform. The nightspots frown on T-shirts and shorts, but they'll accept almost anything else. Bathing suits are rarely seen off the beach. Wear comfortable walking shoes as much of the activity in Newport requires walking. Sweaters and windbreakers are a must for any season as cool offshore breezes can bring a chill to even the hottest summer night. Raingear is a good idea, particularly in the fall.

Where To Stay

Hotel, motel and rooming house space is hard to find and not cheap, especially when you consider that more than 100,000 people can be in town on any one weekend. You'll pay as much as you would in Washington, D.C., or New York. Reservations are a must. If you arrive without a reservation, the Newport Chamber of Commerce (847-1600) operates a free referral service that puts tourists in touch with private homeowners who are willing to let out a room. The following is a list of hotels in Newport: The Hotel Viking (401-847-3300), The Newport Treadway Inn (toll free 1-800-631-0182), The Sheraton Islander Inn (1-800-325-3535), The Howard Johnson Motor Lodge (800-654-2000), The Newport Motor Inn (800-556-3844), The Ramada Inn (683-3600), The Gateway Motel (401-847-2735), The Seaview Motel (401-847-0110), the Carlton Motel (401-847-8400), The Harbor Base Motel (401-847-2600), The Century Motel (401-847-4353), The Budget Motor Inn (401-847-4700), The Floradale Motor Court (401-847-9726), the Paradise Motel (401-847-1500), The Inn at Castle Hill (401-849-3800), the Shamrock Cliff (401-847-7777), The Governor Collins Inn (401-846-1323), The Queen Anne Inn (401-846-5676), Bannister's Wharf (401-846-4500), The Chalet (401-847-1501), The Wayside (401-847-0302), The Bella Vista Guest Manor (401-847-4262).

There are some campgrounds in and around Newport that are well worth the visit if you like to bring your shelter with you. The Second Beach Family Campground is probably the nicest as it is situated right across the street from the beach. Reservations are required (401-849-2822). Listings of other campgrounds are available from the State Division of Tourism in Providence.

School Committee Summer Meeting On Aug. 9

Finding a tenant for the Mysic School and finding a superintendent for all the schools will be the top items of discussion for the School Committee at their mid-summer meeting next Tuesday.

The School Committee holds one meeting during the summer months. This summer's meeting will begin at 7:30 p.m. on Aug. 9 at the Lynch School.

The future of the Mystic School will be the first topic tackled by the School Committee, when it hears a report from the Mystic School Reuse Committee and decides on the school's disposition.

The Mystic School was closed in June because of declining enrollment.

The committee will also hear a report from the Superintendent Screening Committee, which is looking over 153 applicants to take retired Supt. William MacDonald's job.

The School Committee will present the screening committee with its criteria for choosing a new superintendent.

★Montreal

Dress

Montreal is a city of smartly dressed people. While casual dress is fine during the day, a visitor should dress-up for the evening. At fine restaurants, nightspots and concerts, jackets and ties and dresses are definitely appropriate.

Getting There

From this area Montreal is an easy drive. If you are in more of a hurry to reach Montreal, fly to Dorval Airport, 13 miles outside the city. At non-rush hour the taxi ride will take about half an hour and cost between $15.50 and $18. U.S. citizens do not need passports to go to Canada, but it is recommended that some proof of citizenship be carried.

Where to Stay

There are plenty of good hotels in Montreal, with a range of rates from $40 to $90 double occupancy. In addition to the 35-plus hotels, there are another 40 motels and tourist homes in and near the city where rates range from $18 to $40, as well as campgrounds. More than 22,000 rooms are available, but reservations are recommended. Travel agents will have information about seasonal package plans and special rates.

Some of the famous-name hotels include the Ritz-Carlton, Le Quatre Saisons, Western International's Bonaventure, the Queen Elizabeth, Chateau Champllain and the Meridien.

Paraffin For Canning?

Paraffin is no longer recommended for sealing jams and juices. These seals often break when the finished product undergoes changes in temperature. This results in an optimal opportunity for mold to grow, thus making the food product unsuitable for consumption.

These guidelines have been issued as a means of public safety. If you are in doubt regarding the safety of your canned products, contact Julie Schaeffer at the Middlesex County Extension Service, 105 Everett st., Concord.

★ Police

And since the contract is only for one year, the town can negotiate with the police to limit next year's raises to about 5 percent, the figure used for future years in the forecast.

But one selectman feels the raise is higher than Town Meeting will accept.

Mark Lombardi resigned from the town's negotiating team last week because, he said, the raise was too high.

"It's like a poker game — when the ante gets too high, you drop out," said Lombardi. "They went past my limit.

"The average Town Meeting member isn't going to see a difference between 7½ and 7¼ percent," said Lombardi. "When they (the police) put 7 on the table, I said that's too much for me. I wanted under 7."

However, Alan Macdonald, the selectman who stayed on the negotiating team, said he believes the bargain struck with police would satisfy the Town Meeting members.

"If you talked to three or four Town Meeting members, each one would have something different in mind — that was what made the negotiations a little difficult," said Macdonald. "I don't honestly think Town Meeting had any particular percentage in mind. They were more interested in how we could afford any percentage eventually arrived at."

Not only did the contract have a raise Groux's forecast said the town could afford, continued Macdonald, it gave Town Meeting members a chance request smaller raises in a year.

"The one year was a big consideration — it gave the town an opportunity to bargain with all the employee groups at once for next year," said Macdonald. "Town Meeting can judge all town groups' raises at once for the first time since Proposition 2½ came in."

Contracts for the town groups are staggered, so that contracts for the police and custodians come up on different years than contracts for teachers, public works employees and clerks.

Many police officers commented after the Town Meeting decision that they would feel better about taking smaller raises if all town employees received the same raise. But they couldn't see taking a 5 percent raise this year since the teachers, DPW workers and clerks are getting 7 percent in the second year of their contracts.

Sgt. Francis Manzie, president of the Winchester Police Assn. and the head of its negotiating team, said that in giving up the second year of the contract, the police were leaving themselves open for a smaller raise next year.

"The one year will probably be very important, considering the climate of Town Meeting," he said. "From the talk you hear, they really want to scalp everybody next year.

"But this is what the town wanted, or what it appeared Town Meeting wanted to have," said Manzie. "I think we actually did make the best deal we could at this time, considering all the facts. And the people who negotiated for the town would probably say the same thing."

At least one member of the town's negotiating team, Macdonald, said the same thing.

"Since neither side has ratified it, I don't want to be really selling the contract," said Macdonald. "But I can say generally that I feel the contract was very fair to the police and to the town of Winchester. I intend to sell the thing with enthusiasm at Town Meeting."

Macdonald will do his selling job at a Special Town Meeting this fall.

According to Selectmen Chairman Edward O'Connell, the special session will probably be called in late September.

Asked if he thought the police contract's terms would be something Town Meeting would consider approving, O'Connell replied, "They have to consider it, there is no question of them considering it. And the Town Manager says the contract terms are compatible with the financial package he will bring before them."

Before the Special Town Meeting begins, however, the School Committee must complete its negotiations with the school custodians.

According to School Committee member Sandra Rodgers, her committee's representative to the bargaining unit, the group has yet to parley with the custodians.

"Nothing has really gone on yet," said Rodgers, explaining that the School Committee wanted to see Groux's budget forecast before beginning talks. The School Committee, she added, will discuss their negotiations strategy at their Aug. 9 meeting.

"Now that the forecast has come out, and we have some idea of the suggestions Tom Groux is making, it is appropriate for us to decide as a School Committee what we wish to do," she said.

Rodgers predicted the negotiations would go quickly, since the Special Town Meeting was coming relatively soon.

"Knowing there is a time certain for something makes a difference — sometimes things get done because there is a timetable," she said. "I'm quite sure that whatever we're going to do one way or the other will be done in the time frame of a September Town Meeting."

Lombardi feels the custodians' contract will be negotiated quickly for another reason.

"From the beginning, it was obvious we were negotiating for all the groups," said Lombardi. "They other guys were waiting to see what the police got. One bargaining unit really did the bargaining for all the contracts."

Whether that bargaining resulted in a contract (or if you go by Lombardi, contracts) Town Meeting can accept will remain to be seen.

★ Contract

"become a real problem."

The contract terms include a 7¼ percent raise for police next year, as opposed to the 7½ percent promised in the first year of the rejected contract, as well as several new benefits.

Police on night duty will now receive an extra 3¼ percent of their base pay for working between 4 p.m. and 8 a.m.

In the expired contract, police received a flat rate of $1.25 per hour extra for night duty. And in the contract turned down by Town Meeting, they were to receive $2.25 per hour.

According to Rick White, who as assistant to the Town Manager was in on contract talks, the 3¼ percent is equivalent to $2.25 per hour.

However, increase in night duty bonuses would now be guaranteed every time the police receive a raise. Previously, increasing the flat rate was one item of negotiations. If the new contract is approved, it will mean that every time police base pay goes up, the night duty bonus will rise.

"We got a concession on the night-time differential — we thought it was a good bargain," said Sgt. Francis Manzie, the president of the Winchester Police Assn. and the head of the negotiating team. "A percentage is nice to have for us, because you don't have to bargain except if you want the percentage to go up."

However, Selectman Alan Macdonald, a member of the town's negotiating team, said that "whether it's a flat amount or a percentage, there is an amount of negotiation. We've found ourselves in years past talking about dollar amounts, and there is nothing to prevent us from talking about dollar amounts in the future."

Police also received an increase in the fee for detail work such as covering football games or directing traffic during construction. Under the old contract, police earned $10.50 per hour for detail work, and that figure will rise to $13 under the new pact. That increase was included in the contract turned down by Town Meeting.

Policemen's shoes would now be paid for by the town, and six police officers will get an increase in pay from $930 per year to $1,000 for special duties, such as traffic control officer or crime prevention officer. Both items were included in the rejected contract.

For the town, the new contract also gives it a chance to save more money next year, as it was able to eliminate one year of the contract. Instead of granting the promised 6½ percent raise next year, the town can start negotiations from scratch.

One item in the contract, which was also part of the rejected contract, may give the town the chance to save some large sums of money.

The contract calls for a joint committee of police and town officials to look into the state law which calls for a policeman injured on the job to receive full pay without being put on sick leave.

"This is becoming an expensive item of cost for the town," said Town Manager Thomas Groux, explaining it was difficult to put a figure on it because the cost depended on how many men were out on sick leave.

"It has become a real problem in administering the department, maintaining a full work force and controlling costs," said Groux. "If an officer is on the injured list, we have to call in another officer on overtime to replace him. So we're paying 2½ times for police coverage. And we're not allowed to fill the (injured officers') job because they are still on the payroll."

fact that students were busy taking exams and teachers were grading them, there was a great turnout of individuals who have a lot of feelings about who this new person will be."

Papas said that she worked a lot of these responses into the final draft that she sent to School Committee members last week. "I synthesized the input we received from residents with School Committee input when I wrote the draft," she said. "The School Committee must now write their comments and recommendations on it."

Papas discussed some of the major points that she included on the draft which will be presented to the Screening Committee before it begins interviewing candidates in the months to come.

"We want someone whose primary interest and background is in education," she said. "The person should also have good interpersonal skills, be able to relate to both students and the community at large, and be able to speak publicly."

Papas stressed that the person's background should not be in business, and his other education must be extensive. The state requires that the person have a master's degree, and the School Committee would preferably like someone who has a doctorate degree as well.

"We don't see this as a dead-end job," said Papas. "it's a demanding job, and it's full of opportunity. Our community may be small, but we have a very diverse school system that embraces all of the problems and challenges of education today."

Both Papas and Weylman talked about the need for a person experienced in areas such as declining enrollment. "We haven't felt the effects of it yet in the high school, said Weylman. "But teachers and administrators are up against jobs and the new person must keep them upbeat if one third of them will be gone due to declining enrollment. The person must keep the faculty positive at a time when many of them will be losing jobs."

Screening Committee member John Sullivan said the committee had been taking all the various factors into consideration. "We've got input from the hearings, we have the state regulations, we have reviewed the job description, and we've had the input of the School Committee," he said.

Frank said the committee was working well together. 'We've met with a number of community groups and members of our committee were present at all of the hearings in June," he said. "No differences have surfaced among us as far as what we are looking for. We all bring our own different perspectives into this as well, but we seem to be looking for the same thing.

Frank stressed that differences might surface when members have the opportunity to personally meet the candidates, interview them and then share their respective reactions. "It remains to be seen whether we will all agree. We're looking for a person who is a composite of a number of skills and it's the type of thing that when you see it, you know it."

Committee member and high school vice-principal Evander French agreed with Frank. "You really can't do much until you meet with the individual," he said. "We're looking closely at things like the personal statement and philosophies, each candidate submitted in writing to see if they are compatible with the goals of the Winchester School system."

Sullivan explained the procedure the committee used to make judgments on the resumes. "Each person went through the resumes at home all week by themselves, and was familiar with them by our meetings every Monday night throughout July. Then we'd place each resume in a category and vote for either detailed considerations, discussion at the next meeting, or immediate elimination. Our goal has been to spend 90 percent of our time on serious candidates and 10 percent on the others."

The Screening Committee hopes to begin the more detailed process of checking references and then interviewing each candidate in the near future.

Their goal is to recommend three to five candidates by November to the School Committee members who then hope to make their ultimate decision by Dec. 1.

Papas hopes that the new person will be like a breath of fresh air for the Winchester school system.

"We haven't had a turnover or a change for a long time," concluded Papas. "We've had a constant superintendent for the past 12 years. Someone new can evaluate what is here and give us a shot in the arm in new areas. The Screening Committee knows this. We've appointed them to do a job and they must be left alone to do it."

Good-Bye Mrs. P

STEPPING DOWN — After 17 years as the Police Department's secretary, sympathetic ear and unofficial mother, Ellen Padula retired last week. (Staff photo by Amy Sweeney)

Police Secretary Retires From Post As Nurse, Mom And Pal

By LIZ WILLEN

For 17 years, Ellen Padula has quietly performed duties as diverse as searching for old records in cardboard boxes of the Winchester Police Dept's cellar, watching female prisoners, acting as an undercover agent on her lunch hour, or sewing buttons onto police officer's shirts.

She has kept sensitive criminal information confidential, coordinated the police payroll for 42 officers, screened phone calls from deranged individuals demanding to speak to Chief John McHugh, and appeared in court on numerous occasions on behalf of the Police Dept.

"This is not an ordinary secretary's job," said Police Chief McHugh, describing Padula's duties. "We're kind of like family here. Ellen has an uncanny ability to set priorities and decide what is normal. Her job is multi-faceted, and she knows how to handle every aspect of it. In the seven years I've worked with her, she never complained, never got excited."

"I'm the middleman and I'm the pacifist," said Padula, who retired on Friday at the age of 65. "People often take out their frustrations on me when they want to see the chief. There is no putting some people off."

Padua can put people off when she has to, however, and she was still performing this duty on her last day.

'She's acted as a nurse. She does repairs on the men's uniforms. She's been very loyal and we're all close to her.'

—Officer Richard Anselmo

NOT JUST A SECRETARY — Ellen Padula was more than a secretary during her 17-year stint with the Winchester Police Dept. Padula, who retired last week, was a jail matron, an undercover agent, a shield for Chief John McHugh, and a mother to every officer on the force. (Staff photo by Amy Sweeney)

"Do you mind being patient?" she asked a gentleman who said he had to see McHugh. Her pleasant, low-key demeanor proved to be a calming force. She spoke to the man with a smile, and he replied that he wouldn't mind waiting.

"I like to think I'm a smiling person," said Padula. "Of course, some people are more difficult to deal with then others."

Padula has handled difficult people on many occasions. She has walked into her office and found drunks on the floor, being held down by police officers. She has seen criminals being booked, and listened to the raving of lunatics as they were brought into the station. She has heard complaints from people in town on a variety of subjects, simply because she happened to be sitting in her office as they came in.

On occasion, she acted as a sort of a deputy, engaging someone in conversation to get a sense of whether or not he was telling the truth, or taking a walk downtown to keep on eye on against Oxford County, Maine.

Besides O'Connell, scoring contributions in the win came from Gino Giagrande, who came up with a two-run homer in the first, Vandy French, Shane Wyse and Neil Harrington, with a couple hits apiece.

Harrington not only contributed at the bat, he mowed down the Oxford team from the mound. He went the entire route, giving up only four hits and two earned runs, and striking out seven.

With that kind of pitching, Winchester had won the game after the first inning, when they scored three runs. O'Connell pushed across French, on base with a single, with his first-of-three double. Giagrande's homer scored the next two runs.

The All-Stars really put the game out of reach in the second, when they combined for four runs to make the score 6-0.

Harrington led off with a single, and went to third on a Scott Garvey double. Harrington crossed the plate and Garvey went to second when Mark Russo pounded a fielder's choice at the second baseman, and French knocked in Garvey with a single soon after.

Dave Romboli punched another single for yet another run and O'Connell finished out the inning with his second double for his second RBI.

In the next two innings, the All-Stars kept up the pressure, scoring two in the third and two in the fourth for a total of 10, thanks to two singles from Shane Wyse, one-baggers from Mark Russo and Harrington, and yet another double from O'Connell.

Meanwhile, the Oxford nine had managed to get to Harrington for two runs in the third on a fielder's choice, a couple singles and a double.

But that didn't really worry Capodanno after the fourth, when his team was leading 10-2. He cleared the bench, giving all 15 team members a chance, and saw the subs and Harrington hold Oxford scoreless for the rest of the game.

The easy first game win, however, was not any indication of things to come in the tournament.

"I tell you, you've got some teams up here, some ballplayers," said Capodanno. "This is a good tournament, there's some good ball being played here."

The All-Stars came up against one of the better, and bigger teams in the tourney Sunday, Nashua. "Both Nashua and Nashua West's players are huge," noted Capodanno.

Too huge for the All-Stars and pitcher Shane Wyse to handle. Nashua hit up Wyse for two runs in the first inning and another five in the third for seven runs.

And although Vandy French came in in the third, struck out the last two batters and proceeded to shut out the New Hampshire boys for the last half of the game, the damage was done.

The All-Stars could only come up with three runs of their own, although it almost looked like they would pull out a win in the final inning.

Again, it was O'Connell who kept the All-Stars in the game, with a homer in the second and another in the fifth.

And it was O'Connell who was almost the team's savior in the final sixth inning.

With one out, Wyse had reached first on a single. After a second out, he scored on a French single, and men got to first and second when Romboli followed with the third single of the inning.

O'Connell was on deck, and if the pinch hitter up before him had managed a single, it would have been bases loaded and a chance at a game-tying grand slam for the All-Star slugger.

He wouldn't get that chance, as the Nashua pitcher came up with a strike-out to end the inning.

But the exciting finish proved Capodanno's point -- there was some good ball in New Hampshire last weekend.

Whitney Grey Tennis Tournament Scheduled To Be Played Aug. 13, 14

The Tenth Annual E. Whitney Gray Husband and Wife Tennis Tournament will be held Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 13 and 14, at the Packer Courts, Palmer st., across Wedge Pond from downtown Winchester.

The tournament is sponsored by the Winchester Tennis Assn.

As in the past there will be a party for all Saturday night, Aug. 13, at the Jenks Senior Center, Skillings rd., from 7:30 p.m. until midnight. Drinks, dinner, and dancing are all included in the tournament entry fee.

The tournament is open to husbands and wives living in Winchester who want to enjoy themselves both playing tennis and wining and dining. There will be both a championship bracket and a consolation bracket so that each couple is guaranteed at least two tennis matches.

It is expected that last year's winners and runners-up for both the championship and consolation titles will be back again. In 1982 Neil and Kathy Hurley won the championship over Vandy and Leslie French and Bob and Stella Gallant took the consolation title by beating Vito and Angela Sammarco.

Entry forms are available at the Packer Courts or the Sports Shop or from Whit Gray. Entry and dinner reservations must be in to Laurie Minniti by Wednesday, Aug. 10.

MOWING 'EM DOWN — Hurler Neil Harrington was one of the keys to the Winchester 12-year-old All-Stars' opening victory in the Babe Ruth New England Championships last weekend. The All-Star pitcher gave up only four hits and two earned runs while collecting seven strike-outs.

Tourney Time

•All-Stars Split As They Move Through New Englands

By DAVE LEECO

He's pretty young to be thrust into the role of a leader, but that's what Danny O'Connell has been doing as his Babe Ruth 11-and-12-year-old All-Stars enter the final game of the New England championships.

O'Connell's three doubles were the biggest hits in a big-hitting game as the All-Stars took the first game of the tourney Saturday 10-2.

And although the All-Stars lost the second game of the double-elimination championships 7-3 on Sunday, it wasn't because O'Connell had fallen down on the job.

O'Connell hit two homers, two of the All-Stars' runs, and probably could have batted in six more if the Nashua, N.H., pitchers didn't manage to avoid throwing to him.

In the third inning, O'Connell came up to bat with Vandy French on second. Rather than let him hit the ball out of the park and put the local All-Stars ahead 3-2, Nashua intentionally walked the 6-foot slugger and first baseman.

O'Connell almost had another chance to tie the game in the bottom of the final inning. On deck with two men on, O'Connell watched helplessly as the All-Stars' pinch hitter struck out, stranding the baserunners and ending the game.

"Danny's gained some respect up there," commented manager Paul Capodanno.

"In the inning French led off with a double, they intentionally passed him so he would not have a shot to hit it out of the park — they could see it coming, they were afraid of him," continued the manager. "In the sixth, when he was on deck, they were going to intentionally walk in a run if he was at bat, just so he wouldn't have a shot at another homer."

O'Connell's not the only secret to the success of the All-Stars, who took the Eastern Mass. championships two weeks ago and are one win away from the New England title.

The win could have come Tuesday night (after press deadline) as the All-Stars took on the winner of the Dudley, Mass., versus Warwick, R.I., contest.

The All-Stars have gotten that far through a tremendous, all-around, offensive effort — an effort that outshelled their opponents 53-19 in the EMass tourney and gave them the 10-2 victory Saturday

•13-Year-Olds Prove They Are Winners In Invitational

The 13-year-olds of the Winchester Babe Ruth All-Stars had a lot to prove as the went into the losers bracket of the Burlington Invitational Tournament last week.

They had to prove they weren't losers at all, that their quick elimination in the Babe Ruth District Tourney last month was a fluke.

They had to prove that they could beat Melrose, the team that knocked them out of that tournament and one of their opponents in the Invitational.

And they had to prove that the team that put them in the Invitational's losers' bracket, Wakefield, was not the top team in the tournament.

Now, sports fans, you've got proof.

The 13-year-olds settled their month-old score with Melrose with 11 hits and a 7-6 victory.

They shut up the Wakefield boosters with a double-whammy, outhitting and outlasting Wakefield in a 6½-hour double-header.

And with the second win in that double-header, the All-Stars silenced the critics who blasted them after their loss in the District Tourney, as they took the Invitational championship.

"The kids and I have been taking a lot of flak since the districts, people saying we didn't live up to our publicity," commented coach Bob Nutile. "But that just isn't the case. These kids are good."

The kids got the chance to prove how good they were thanks to one of the player's parents, George Sexeny, who put up the $100 entrance fee for the tourney.

But to make Sexeny's investment pay off, the kids had to go the hard route.

After a 11-4 win against previously undefeated Northboro in the opening game of the tourney July 23, the All-Stars were knocked off and knocked into the losers' bracket by Wakefield in a close 7-6 game.

But they fought their way back through the losers' bracket with victories over Woburn and Melrose to once again face Wakefield in the double-elimination finals on a steamy Saturday last weekend.

•14-Year-Olds Keep Plugging Through Difficult Times

You've got to give them credit for trying.

The Winchester 14-year-old Babe Ruth team found themselves struggling back from the abyss all through an invitational tournament in Burlington this week.

Despite losing the first game of the tournament, the 14-year-olds, led by the shutout pitching of Jim Kavanaugh, bounced back to win the second round 2-0.

Then, in the third game of the tourney, the boys had to fight back yawns and fight back from an 8-2 deficit.

The yawns came because the rain-delayed game didn't even start until 9:30, and ran to well past midnight.

The deficit came at the hands of a Wakefield team which started the game with eight runs in three innings.

The Winchester troops managed to overcome the scoring gap, picking up four runs in the fourth and another two in the fifth thanks to a homer from Peter Regan.

But both tiredness and Wakefield turned out to be more than the Winchester nine could handle. Wakefield scored runs in the bottom of the fifth and the sixth to take the game 13-8.

Nonetheless, the team's coaches were pleased with the tourney.

"The kids had a lot of fun. They were happy to be playing," commented coach Steve Preston. "This was the first time our kids had played under the lights, and that was a nice experience."

Manager Jim Kavanaugh noted that his team had a chance to go up against some good competition in the tourney. "I thought the play was of a pretty high quality," he said.

For Winchester, the highest quality play came from its pitchers.

In the first game, the loss to Melrose, Robbie Glynn pitched "one heck of a game," according to Kavanaugh. "A few breaks the other way and it could have been a shutout."

Glynn, in fact, pitched shutout ball for five of the seven innings. But in the third, a long pop fly that fell into short center and an overthrow cost him three runs. And in the final inning, a series of singles and another walk cost him another three.

Glynn's teammates managed to garner only one run, which came in the

Rising Girls Tennis Team Splits Final Matches

They learned how to get tough.

The Winchester Girls Suburban Tennis Team ended up their summer with a respectable 3-4 record, after beginning their season by getting blown away by older, more experienced teams.

"By the end of the season, the girls were less intimidated, much tougher and much more in control," said Coach Robert Horne. "They didn't have a lot of experience, but they showed a lot of talent. I hope they stick with tennis, because they have a lot of potential."

The potential and toughness that Horne described helped the team overcome Burlington Country Club, 3-2 on July 27. And although the girls lost their last match of the season against Malden on July 29, they played with more control than Horne noticed all season.

"They were nervous and apprehensive," he said. "Malden had a very good team. I think their nervousness was to their advantage, though. It helped their match. They played very well."

Kara Marshall played first singles and lost 13-11. "I think she got a little tired," Horne said. "It was a very close match. They almost had to play a tie-breaker."

The second singles match was played by Kim Small, who played her best match of the season, according to Horne. "She lost 12-6, but went to deuce every game," Horne said. "It was a real seesaw battle. I could never tell who was winning until they came off the court."

The third singles match was played by Rachel Cooper. "She was also tough," said Horne. "She didn't have much singles experience but played steady tennis against a powerful hitter." Cooper lost her match, 10-6.

The only victory of the day for Winchester came from the first doubles team of Traci Macony and Sandra Bennett. They won, 12-10, after being down 8-3 at the midway point. "It was only Bennett's second match of the season and she played a superb, aggressive net game," said Horne.

"Macony provided steadiness from the base line and had a lot of serving power. It was a real doubles team game, and they showed a lot of knowledge of how to play doubles."

The second doubles team, made up of Beth Small and Carrie Tozza, lost their match 12-6. "They played good tennis but lost to a more experienced team," Horne noted.

Horne's team beat Burlington Country Club at Winchester on July 27, by a score of 3-1.

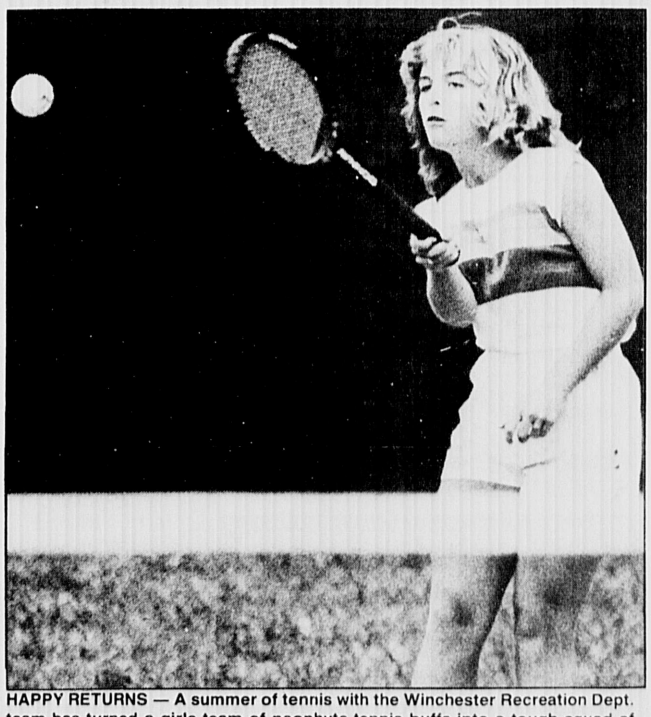
Kathy Fury, displaying what Horne called excellent form, lost her first singles match. Kara Marshall was victorious in a well played second singles match, and the third singles were forfeited.

"The big match of the day was the first doubles match," said Horne. "Traci Macony and Rachel Cooper played their best match of the season and won 13-14 on a tie-breaker," he added. "They easily won the tie-breaker, 7-1, but it was a real hairy match."

Horne had high praise for Cooper. "Rachel was a new player, and it was her first match of the season for us," he noted.

The second doubles team of Kim Small and Carrie Tozza lost, but Horne said the girls were encouraged. "It was a very gratifying match for Carrie because she served so well," he said. "Earlier in the season she didn't know how to serve at all."

Horne said he was very proud of the team's record. "We had a good time, the girls weren't pressured to win, and most of them were eager to play in matches," he said. "They learned a lot, and overcame a lot of inexperience to develop match-toughness."



HAPPY RETURNS — A summer of tennis with the Winchester Recreation Dept. team has turned a girls team of neophyte tennis buffs into a tough squad of competitors. Second singles Kim Small is no longer an easy mark for an opponent's baseline shot, as she returns the ball with ease.

Summer Softball Team Suffers 3-0 Loss To Tewksbury Ten

By LIZ WILLEN

No matter how they looked at it, the game was a disappointment.

The Winchester Girls Softball Team lost to Tewksbury, a team they considered one of their biggest rivals, on July 25 by a score of 3-0.

The team had hoped to beat Tewksbury, which would have given them a winning record of 5-4, instead of a losing one of 4-5.

If they could have looked upon the game as a game played well, they might have borne the loss better. They couldn't, since they left men on base three times.

If they could have looked upon it as a close game, in which they had hit the ball well or scored a lot of runs, they might have felt better.

It wasn't that kind of game — they didn't score any runs at all.

Coach Cathy Mangano's only consolation was that her pitcher, Kerry Price, lasted the whole game and pitched very well. Mangano also felt that her fielders played well.

"It was mainly a 0-0 game and both teams were looking for more action," Mangano said. "It was a quick game with quick innings and no one was getting on base because the fielding and pitching for both teams were so good."

Tewksbury didn't get on the board until the fourth inning, after a base hit knocked in a girl who had singled, stole second and was brought in on a sacrifice hit.

Winchester blew their three chances to score, which came in the fourth, sixth and seventh innings. In the fourth inning, both Mich Powers and Carey MacDonald got base hits, and both were left on at the end of the inning.

In the sixth inning, Julie Conley singled, Kerry Price was walked and Kelly Lent had a base hit. Again, the girls were left on base.

"By the seventh inning, even though

CIVIL WAR Unit looking for members: The 5th Massachusetts Battery is made up of people in the Greater Boston area interested in the Civil War. There are two divisions: (1) competition shooting divisions which is a North-South Skirmish Association unit that competes in team matches with a full-sized muzzleloading cannon as well as with muskets, carbines and revolvers of the pre-1865 era. And (2) the "chowder and marching division" which takes part in parades, battle re-enactments, and authentic living history demonstrations. You can join either or both depending on your interests. The musket and carbine shooting events involve team shooting at breakable targets with the shortest elapsed time determining the winning team. It's fun if you're interested in black powder shooting. HIDDEN VALUES

Don't pass up buying a home just because it doesn't measure up to your idea of perfection. Most home-buying prospects have a specific dollar limit in mind. They also have a particular type house and neighborhood in mind. Rarely do the two coincide. Because of the continual rise on real estate values, quite often one or the other has to give.

If you decide to wait for the perfect house at the perfect price, the spread between the two will probably increase due to inflation rather than close. So, if you do find a house in a good location, that is structurally sound and available at a "bargain price," my advice is to buy it.

Often, a little TLC can do wonders and create a valuable facelift to a house that came on the market in a less-than-best appearance. You'd be surprised at what a paint job or re-doing a kitchen, new lighting fixtures, installing built-in appliances, or making a basement into a extra bedroom or family room can do to increase the comfort and value of such a "bargain."

There are still many good housing values on the market. House seekers whose price is limited should look beyond the outside appearance and consider its hidden possibilities.

someone police were suspicious of.

"This started out as a small, part-time job," said Padula, who originally applied for the position from an ad she'd noticed in The Winchester Star. Padula was living on Franklin rd. at the time, where she lived for 22 years with her husband and five children.

"After two weeks, on the job, their full-time secretary quit, and they asked me to stay on full time," Padula recalled. "Now here it is, 17 years later. I never realized how much there would be to do, or how much my responsibilities would grow. As I write out my notes for the person who will be taking my job, I look at them and I can't believe that I really do all these things."

The people Padula works with know that she does all these things and much more.

"She's been a personal secretary to lots of the patrolmen as well as the chief," said Officer Richard Anselmo. "She was always doing small favors for people. She's acted as a nurse, and always has first-aid equipment with her. She does repairs on the men's uniforms, and keeps a candy jar full of sweets that she provides. She's been very loyal and we're all close to her."

Anselmo recalled her sensitivity 13 years ago when he was was waiting to hear if he'd been hired by the Winchester Police. "I used to call her on an average of five times a week, " he said. "She was so nice about it. I kept calling every day and she kept telling me, 'Don't give up.' She's going to be hard to replace."

McHugh praised Padula for accommodating herself to all the changes that have taken place within the department during the 17 years that she has worked there.

"She's experienced different bosses, tremendous internal changes within the building, and her work load has increased dramatically," he said. "She never once complained throughout the changes. She was quiet, dependable, and industrious throughout it all."

Padula has known some personal difficulties as well, which she never let interfere with her work life. "She was rarely absent from work," said McHugh. "She never let anything interfere with the way she performed her job."

Padula lost her daughter in December of 1981. "It was my greatest personal tragedy," she said. "She contracted spinal meningitis at the age of 26, and died hours later. Afterwards, I worked for the passage of the Orphan Drug Act, which was passed about eight months ago. The act provides money for research to help find cures for rare, incurable diseases. I was so happy when the act was passed, because something good came out of a deep personal tragedy."

Padula's efforts were a source of comfort to her during this tragic time. She is happiest when helping others. "It is important to me to know that I can help someone else," she said.

McHugh pointed out this quality in Padula as well. "If it was for the good of the Police Dept., the community or just to help someone, she'd do anything," he said. "Even when she has to take awful abuse from people, which has happened to her frequently, she'd respond politely and courteously, with dignity and understanding. She was always lady-like."

Padula said that the police often protected her, and were acutely aware of her presence as a woman in a male-dominated office. (There are two women dispatchers and two other female secretaries.)

"They always realized there was a lady working here," she recalled. "They were just great about it. If there was a drunk outside my office, or an argument with a lot of foul language being used, they'd slam the door so that I wouldn't have to hear it."

Patricia Mawn, who has worked with Padula for 8½ years, said, "The police protected us. They were great about that, and we knew how to read them. Mrs. P and I knew when they wanted to get off the phone, or when they wanted some information. There won't be any team like the two of us again. I'll miss her."

As Mawn spoke, flowers kept arriving at Padula's desk. "Everyone has just been wonderful," said Padula. "I'm really touched and honored. I don't know what I did"

Many other town employees knew what Padula did, and were impressed enough to honor her with a cocktail reception at the Knights of Columbus on Thursday afternoon.

"The minute we heard Ellen would attend, we all went hog wild," said Lillian Cawa, who works at the Treasurer's office." Everyone did their part, and either cooked something or brought food."

The hall was alive with people who had high praise for Padula, among them Town Controller Al Faggiano. "I've had frequent contact with Ellen Padula in the 13 years I've worked here," Faggiano said. "I've spoken with her about administrative functions, and she has always been efficient, pleasant mannered and cooperative. She worked with the upper echelon as well as with day-to-day problems that arose. She was always confidential about police work, and has always strived to do the best she can. She's really been outstanding and we'll miss her."

"I've just made so many friends in Winchester," said Padula, who was born and raised in West Medford. They are not just acquaintances, they really are friends. My relationships have been tremendous, and I've really loved it. Winchester is a very unique town."

Padula moved to Newton, N.H., several years ago and designed her own house and rock garden. She has commuted each day for a total of two hours with Jim Lawrence, an accountant for The Winchester Star.

"She's a very giving person who has never expected anything in return," said Lawrence, who was taking Padula out to lunch on her last day. "She's just super."

Padula was trying very hard to be productive on her last day of work, despite the luncheon engagement and constant interruption from well-wishers. "When I walk out of this place, I want it to be spic and span," said Padula. "I want the new person in charge to have a clean slate."

That new person will have a very tough act to follow.

"She's been a mother, wife and grandmother figure to all the men here," said McHugh. "All the young officers have been in to say goodbye to her. There was a great deal of exchange between she and 42 officers. She had a personal relationship with each one of them."

McHugh pointed out a telephone message that Padula had left on her desk earlier that morning. "At the end of the note, she attached a postscript describing the man's manners and how many times he had called. She just had her own style. She could allay people's fears and she knew when to handle a matter delicately."

Padula says she is pleased about retiring, but she admits, "I'm not so sure how I'll feel on Monday. I know I'll miss it." Padula plans to spend time with her four grandchildren, then go to Florida to visit her sister. "For the first month I'll do nothing," she said. "I'll organize my life a little and have some time for myself."

Padula returned to her notes, and attempted to finish up the work she was still responsible for on her last day. "I'm going to get some work done if I have to stay here till 8 o'clock tonight;" she said in between the arrival of still more flowers, presents and visitors.

"You'll always be a part of the Winchester Police Dept.," McHugh told her.

An impressive relief job from Sean McElhinney and the longest homer ever seen in Burlington from J.R. Morton helped give the local boys the first win, 10-8.

Half-an-hour later, hot and exhausted, the two teams were back at it again. And it was Winchester that had the stamina. They beat Wakefield 16-10 for the tournament title.

In the first game, it looked like Wakefield would repeat its triumph of earlier in the week, as they opened their bottom half of the first inning with a run.

It didn't look that way for long though. In the top of the second, as Nutile put it, "There were some fireworks" from the Winchester hitters.

Alex Nasson led off the inning with a walk and moved to second on a John Kirkpatrick single. Both runners got into scoring position after the next batter, Ken Double, sacrificed to move the runners along.

A Frank Gianci single drove in both runners, and the bases were soon loaded again thanks to a walk to McElhinney and a single from Dave Colozzi.

That's when the biggest firework of all burst. J.R. Morton hit a behemoth of a home run to the deepest part of Simonds Park in Burlington, over the hill in right center, over the wall at the top of the hill and into the parking lot.

"Everybody's face was like this," said Nutile, eyes and mouth wide open. "The tournament director said he never seen a ball hit that far in any game, any age."

The grand-slam put the Winchester team up 6-1, but Wakefield wasn't about to call it quits. They came up with four of their own in the third off starter Alex Nasson to come within one. But McElhinney came in, shut them down, and held them to a run in the fifth and two in the sixth.

While McElhinney was spinning his magic from the mound, the rest of the team was pounding the ball away from the plate.

They scored three in the top of the fifth, with an RBI from Ken Double and a two-RBI double from Kirkpatrick. That put the game out of reach, with an insurance run coming in the sixth from a Andy Sexeny walk and a Nasson double.

That was the end of the game, but the Winchester ballplayers weren't through with Wakefield for the day. They blasted 12 hits in 16-10 slugfest.

The key to the game came in the sixth, with the Winchester team leading 14-11. Wakefield loaded the bases with two outs off tired starter Kirkpatrick. Nutile brought Morton in to relieve.

"They watched J.R. warm up, and he threw every ball over (catcher) Andy Sexeny's head," recalled Nutile. "So they pinch hit a midget, figuring J.R. would walk in a run."

He almost did, throwing two balls over the diminutive pinch hitter's head and well out of the strike zone. But Morton settled down, blew three straight balls down the middle, and struck out the batter to end the inning.

Wakefield would never threaten again, and to show the Wakefield manager that he could, indeed, find the strike zone, Morton struck out the final batter to end the game and give the team the championship.

Although they savored their championship victory, the Winchester squad got nearly as much satisfaction from beating Melrose in the fourth game of the week-long tournament.

Melrose was the team that knocked them out of the divisionals, and according to Nutile, "We figured we had a score to settle."

Settle it they did, with a 7-6 victory. And the boy who gave them the victory, Dave Tucci, wasn't even on the team that went to the divisionals.

Nutile had added Tucci to complement his pitching staff, and a good thing, too. In the Melrose game, starter Kirkpatrick pitched to one batter, gave up a triple, and was injured.

Tucci came in, piched four innings, and gave up only three earned runs before tiring in the fourth. He gave up two more that inning, but Morton came in again to close the door, and Tucci got the win.

He aquired that statistic thanks to 11 hits from his teammates, with Colozzi, Morton, Nasson and Gianci getting two apiece.

The big inning came in the top of the fourth, when the Winchester batters unloaded for four runs. "Nothing fancy, all singles," commented Nutile, but it did the job.

With the tournament victory over Wakefield, and their measure of revenge against Melrose, the Winchester All-Stars proved themselves.

Dave Colozzi, Ken Double, J.R. Morton, Andy Sexeny, Alex Nasson, John Kirkpatrick, Frank Gianci, Ed Farley, Sean McElhinney, Greg Wyse, Paul Capodanno, Todd DelVecchio, Mike Casalinouvo, Dave Tucci and George Venuti can say to their critics, "We told you so."

And as for Nutile, he's looking for another tournament so the All-Stars can brag of a 2-1 tourney record for the season.

Residents Should Claim Money Soon

State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane's office is attempting to return more than $4 million to 30,000 Massachusetts residents under the state's unclaimed money law.

Treasurer Crane noted that this money has been reported to the Treasury as unclaimed by insurance companies doing business within the commonwealth. Included are unpaid life insurance benefits, unpaid benefits on health and liability insurance policies, pension checks and customer overpayments. Also, uncashed state income tax refund checks and vendor checks are included in the total.

Under Massachusetts unclaimed money law (M.G.L. c. 200A), accounts which have been unclaimed for at least five years are declared abandoned and must be reported to the Treasury. The Treasury Department then tries to locate the rightful owner or legal heirs.

Individual entitlements from these unclaimed accounts range from $25 to a single account worth more than $10,000. Last spring Crane released the names of 42,000 Massachusetts residents who were owed more than $17 million, most of this resulting from unclaimed savings accounts.

Persons who believe they may have a valid claim should call the Treasurer's Office at 523-1042 or Toll Free 1-800-632-8027.

Winchester residents on the list are:

Jacob Babakian, Michael Connolly, Edgar Creamer, David H. Demacee, John J. Denning Jr., Robert D. DiLoreto, Roger Fenn, John J. Hefferman, Marion Kerrigan;

Also Martin A. Kiley, Antone J. Leppzer, William M. MacDonald, Charles H. Malloy, Vera D. Myer, Thelma Paterson, Henry Quill, Vincent Savarese, Ellsworth J. Stay, George D. Whitten.

third on singles from Jason Danfield and Arthur Gordon, followed by a RBI sacrifice from Michael Donaghey.

The Winchester team got its shutout pitching performance in the second game of the tournament, as Jim Kavanaugh Jr. struck out six and gave up only six hits to hold Burlington scoreless.

He also gave himself an insurance run in the 2-0 win, reaching first on a single, taking second on an error, stealing third and going home when his steal forced a bad throw.

Credit for the winning run, though, goes to Peter Ockerbloom, who pounded a homer in the second to put his team on top.

The final game was a see-saw affair, with the Winchester team repeatedly gaining a slight lead and seeing fall away.

They went ahead 2-0 in the top of the first after an Ockerbloom single scored the speeding Peter Regan and Gareth Kenton, both on with walks.

But Wakefield picked up a run in their half of the first, another four in the second and three more in the third to take a 8-2 lead.

Wakefield gave back some of those runs in the top of the fourth, as walks to seven men and a hit batter pushed three runs across. The only RBI came from Ockerbloom, whose grounder to short scored the fourth run of the inning for Winchester.

But the team proved it could score runs for real in the next inning, as Peter Regan's two-run homer tied the game.

The lead evaporated again though, as Wakefield scored in its final two at bats for the win.

the score was 3-0, I felt there was a little hope to score," said Mangano. "We got the bases loaded after Mich Powers walked, Ellen Clavin got a base hit and Lauren Hartnett was walked. But there were two outs already, and we needed more than that."

Mangano called the game "intense" and said the team felt pretty frustrated. "There was just no offense," she lamented. "We weren't getting the key hits we needed and too many people were just left on base."

Mangano is optimistic about her team's chances to improve their record this week. "We have three games and we want to win them," she said.

The next home game will be on Friday, against Woburn, at 6 p.m. at McDonald Field.

'Clinically Dead' Woman's Life Saved By Fire Dept. EMTs

By DAVE LEECO

Fortunately for a West Side woman, she was one case in 100.

Last week, Winchester Emergency Medical Technicians rushed to the woman's home expecting to find an asthma attack victim. Instead, they found the woman slumped on the floor, heart and breathing stopped.

EMTs Peter Reid and David Dalton Jr. immediately began cardio-pulmonary resuscitation, but the odds weren't with their 43-year-old patient.

"Of the hundreds of times you do CPR, only one case comes through," said Reid. "This is the one that survived."

Two days ago, the woman was released from Winchester Hospital.

"They saved my life — the EMTs are literally responsible for my being here today," said the woman, who asked she not be identified. "To put it mildly, I am grateful.

"I have a beautiful family, I'm lucky enough to live in Winchester. I have a lot of life to live, and I didn't want it to end that fast," continued the woman. "But if it wasn't for them. . . ."

The EMTs were called to their life-saving mission Aug. 1 at 2:15 a.m. by the woman's husband, who said she was having an asthma attack.

"When we got to the house, we found the woman in cardiac arrest — no pulse, no respiration. She was clinically dead," recalled Reid.

"We immediately began CPR, and after two rounds she responded beautifully," he continued. "We got a good strong pulse in the patient.

Dalton and Reid grabbed fellow EMT Ed Smith, who had arrived at the scene with Fire Engine 4, to drive the am-

Mystic School Leased To Belmont Church

By DAVE LEECO

The Mystic School will remain a school, although in the hands of a Belmont church group.

The School Committee voted Tuesday night to rent the school to the Faith Fellowship Ministries of New England Inc., a non-denominational, unaffiliated Christian church.

The church intends to start a private school in the closed Symmes Corner elementary school, and convert a large, first-floor classroom into a sanctuary.

Although the church's successful bid to take over the school avoided the problem of having an empty, boarded-up building in the fall, School Committee members wished the solution hadn't come so suddenly.

Most of the School Committee members, including Michael Ronayne, a resident of the Mystic School area, hadn't even heard of the proposal before Tuesday.

In fact, School Committee members, full of unanswered questions, had to take a 10-minute break from their debate on the proposal Tuesday to call in the chairman of the Mystic School Reuse Committee to bring them the details of the church's plan.

One School Committee member, Mary Jean Weylman, voted against the proposal — not because she was against having the church group move in, but because she felt "the timing is too short.

"To hear this and vote on it Tuesday, and have occupancy by Friday, is not a good way for the School Committee to do business," Weylman said.

But for the other four School Committee members voting (Ronayne abstained), relief at finding a tenant for the school before fall, along with Mystic Reuse Committee Chairman Charles Tseckares' strong endorsment of the proposal, was enough to win their approval.

Besides, since they are not meeting again until September, the School Committee had to vote Tuesday night or risk losing the tenant.

With that 4-1 vote, the 250-member Faith Fellowship Ministries became the new Mystic tenant, although the contract signed by the School Committee must be approved by the town counsel before it is final. The two-year-old group hopes to move into the school by Friday.

The agreement came after meetings over the last few weeks between church members, the Mystic Reuse Committee and the Mystic School Neighborhood Committee. Those meetings were capped by negotiations Monday night between church officials and School Committee vice chairman Roger Bauman.

Bauman said that those negotiations resulted in a five-year lease calling for a $6,000 rent the first year, $8,000 the second year, $11,000 the third year, $15,000 the fourth year and $19,000 the final year. The group would also pay the $33,000 annual maintenance cost of the building, he said.

The gradually rising rent was arrived at, Bauman explained, because as a young church facing high costs to start a school, the church could not afford a high rent the first few years.

Bauman said that he "found them (the church officials) to be a pleasant group, and they have agreed to suggestions of the neighborhood committee — for instance, no bingo, and the use of the playground for parking would be for the worship service only."

But when fellow School Committee members started pressing Bauman for details of the church's financial strength, or the feeling of the neighborhood on the proposal, he answered, "My feeling for this is only what Charles (Tseckares) told

A Hidden Problem

Child Abuse In Town Oft Goes Unreported

By LIZ WILLEN

People don't want to believe that it's happening in Winchester.

Child abuse is a frightening subject for people to come to terms with, yet it's going undetected and unreported all over the country and Winchester is no exception.

"There is no question about the fact that it's going on a lot more than people believe in a community like Winchester," said Professor Richard Bourne, who is the author of several books and articles on child abuse and a legal consultant to the trauma team for abused children at Boston City Hospital.

Figures of one million reported cases of physically abused children each year, with an estimated 4,000 in Massachusetts alone, have jolted the public, the legislature and professionals into an awareness of a problem that is painful to recognize.

Attention is also being focused on other forms of child abuse, not as easily recognizable as physical abuse but just as difficult to swallow - sexual abuse within the family, emotional neglect and verbal abuse.

Despite all the attention, many Winchester residents hold on to the notion, "It couldn't happen here." They may cling to stereotypes about child abusers, assuming that the problem is an inner-city one likely to occur only among the poor and minority groups.

"In the past, people have been afraid to report child abuse cases in Winchester," said Inspector Richard Beaton, the Winchester Police Juvenile Officer. "It's been more or less a cover-up."

Experts recognize that there are many more cases than the few brought to the attention of the police, hospital and the Dept. of Social Services because stress, the major cause of child abuse, is something universal, felt in all homes at all times.

"There is stress in every home and the poor aren't the only ones who feel it," said social worker Nancy McHugh. "In a town like Winchester, people don't feel free about sharing their stress. They think they should have these perfect families where the parents don't get angry, the children don't misbehave and there aren't explosions."

Stress can be caused by anything from a financial problem to a screaming baby, and it can happen at any time in any family. Sometimes a parent reaches his or her boiling point as a result of the stress and hits a child or speaks to the child in a way he or she never really intended to.

"On a day-to-day level, in the average family, there is plenty of potential for abuse," said McHugh. "It can happen in any family."

When it does happen, parents are often sorry that they lost their cool. "Most parents don't mean to abuse their children," said Elizabeth Kenney, Director of Social Services at Winchester Hospital. "Through stress they may deflect their anger onto their children without realizing that they are being abusive."

When children don't meet their parents' expectations of them, they may also be subject to their parents' stress and anger.

"Parents who are unhappy with their

Parent Aides

By LIZ WILLEN

There are a lot of parents who feel like failures at times.

Bringing up a child is something no parent can have prior experience with, and new parents may often feel isolated and frustrated.

Parent Aides, a new program developed by area social agencies recognizes the feelings of hopelessness, isolation and frustration that new parents often feel, as well as the fact that parents who have been mistreated as children may mistreat their own children.

In an attempt to prevent child abuse and help parents feel better about themselves, the program has a staff of 15 trained volunteers who work with parents in the Mystic Valley region by spending time with parents under stress and becoming a friend to them.

Parents Anon.

By LIZ WILLEN

A lot of misconceptions exist about child abuse, and one of them is that you have to be actively beating a child to seek help as a parent.

Parents Anonymous, a self-help group that provides support for parents who are concerned about their relationships with their children, is often a victim of this misconception.

"People hear the term 'anonymous' and they picture a parent who openly stands up before a group and says, "I beat my kid," says Larry Peers, assistant statewide coordinator for Parents Anonymous. "This just isn't so. PA is anonymous in that we only use first names, and everything is kept confidential, but we are not just for child abusers. The group is a supportive and non-threatening one in which parents can talk about some of their difficulties and

Girard Construction Starts Despite Neighbors' Protests

TM Petition, Court Case Waiting

By DAVE LEECO

Although they won the sympathy of residents across town in their fight to stop the connection of Hilltop rd., Pilgrim dr. and Girard rd., neighbors on those streets have apparently lost their battle.

But they will keep fighting right up until the last yard of asphalt is paved, hoping to at least bar all but emergency vehicles from using the new roadway.

With an state Appeals Court decision two weeks ago not to grant a temporary restraining order on the project, construction began on the connection of the three dead-end streets.

And it is likely that the construction will be completed before the neighbors can bring the issue back to Town Meeting, which approved the $87,000 to link the streets last spring.

"Once we couldn't stop the project temporarily (with the restraining order), that was the ballgame," said attorney Nelson Gediman of 19 Girard rd., president of the neighborhood association which has been fighting the link.

Gediman and other neighborhood residents expect that construction will be finished before they can begin to stop it through their Town Meeting article, supported by residents from across the town, or their court case.

GOING THROUGH — Despite the strong objections of residents, who have filed a court suit and a petition with Town Meeting, construction of the link between Girard rd., Hilltop rd. and Pilgrim dr. began two weeks ago, and is expected to be completed by mid-October.

That may be a realistic expectation — construction will probably be completed in two months, according to the head of the Dept. of Public Works.

But if the residents get to Town Meeting before the project is finished, they will ask that the connection be made only an emergency road.

"We may be able to stop it, at least to have the area used only as an emergency drive-through and not create a road with a lot of traffic," said Leigh Peritz, vicepresident of the neighborhood action committee.

The project, promoted by town officials who feared a law suit because the three dead-end streets made fire and police protection difficult, was passed by Town Meeting over the vociferous objections of the people who live on the streets. Those residents claimed that the dead-end streets cut down on traffic and lend a quiet, peaceful air to the neighborhood.

Immediately after the Town Meeting vote, Gediman filed suit against the town to stop the project, claiming it would destroy the character and reduce the property values of the neighborhood and that blasting from the road construction would damage nearby homes.

At the same time, Gediman asked for a temporary restraining order to halt construction until the case was heard in court. But, as Gediman commented, "the case never got to trial on its merits."

Asked if he would take any further action in court, Gediman answered, "I don't think so. The deed is done already. Two days after the motion (on the restraining order) was denied, they were down there chopping down 150-year-old trees."

The neighborhood organization, known as CROW (Citizens Rights Organization of Winchester), took a second tack in its fight against the link, gathering 100 signatures

Ex-Mystic Principal Retires, Muraco Principal Keeps Job

By CHARLOTTE MERYMAN

One of the most valued principals in the Winchester school system has stepped down, creating a domino effect that has allowed a second principal to keep his job and made room for a teacher to move into an acting principalship.

Dr. Martha Grenzeback, who began her teaching career in 1943 as an elementary school teacher and administrative intern at the Wyman School, has resigned from her position as principal of the Mystic School, retroactive to June 30 of this year.

"My departure will ease the situation for you and others," wrote Grenzeback in her letter to Acting School Superintendent Robert Forest.

The resignation will ease the situation because Muraco School Principal Richard Young will no longer have to give up his post to make room for Grenzeback. And it also gave Forest the chance to give former Washington School Principal George Flynn, now a Vinson-Owen School teacher, another opportunity running a school.

After the decision this winter to close the Mystic School, the committee had been left with six principals for five schools and had been forced to lay-off Muraco principal Young.

Grenzeback's resignation, (which was "regretfully" and unanimously approved by the committee,) means that such a move is no longer necessary.

In addition, the position of acting principal at the Ambrose School, required by the temporary departure of Ambrose principal Forest to serve as acting superintendent, and for which Young would probably have been chosen, will now be offered to Vinson-Owen teacher Flynn.

Forest recommended that the committee vote to rescind Young's lay-off notice and the follow-up letter which arranged for the hearing provided him under the principal's contract.

Forest urged also that the committee then vote to notify Young that his principalship would continue uninterupted.

"I feel in my heart that this is the right way to proceed," said Forest.

"I think that this resignation lifts from our shoulders the need to identify one person from a group of able principals," responded committee member Roger Bauman. "I vote to accept the recommendations."

The rest of the committee followed Bauman's lead and the measure passed unanimously.

Forest then raised the question of the principalship of the Ambrose school during the fall of this year. He requested that the committee vote to obtain Flynn's services.

Forest noted especially that Flynn had "proved himself to the system" in his previous position as principal of the Washington School before its closure four years ago.

"He has done an admirable job, a very fine job," said Forest "and he has gone on to show that he can, with a demotion in his position, do a fine job as a teacher."

"There is no doubt that Martha's voice and manner will be missed," said Bauman. "She has made many friends and students over the years."

Grenzeback's career has included principalships at the Parkhurst School, where

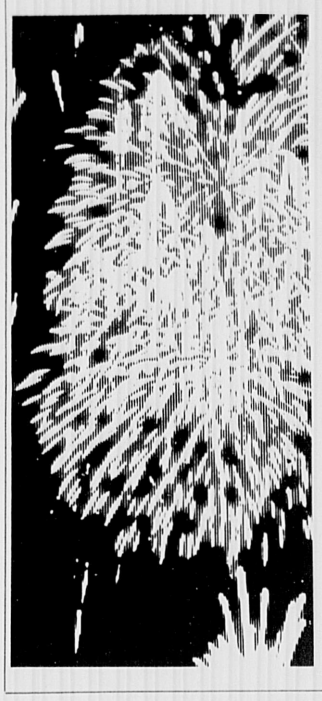
Italian Tradition To Be Brought Back



Tradition has always been important in the Italian culture and a group of Winchester residents are determined to keep it that way.

The Society of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary Inc. will be holding its fourth annual carnival at Leonard Field this Friday and Saturday. The carnival will feature adult and kiddie rides, fireworks, Italian food and refreshments, as well as a shrine to the madonna, a procession through the Italian neighborhood, and a Saturday afternoon mass.

"The heart of it is still the mass in honor of the Virgin Mary," explained John Mercurio Jr., treasurer of the society.

The history of the festival dates back to the early part of this century.

"The feast evolved probably during the teens with the people of Italian descent coming over from Italy and making a home in the United States," said Mercurio. "They chose patron saints for thanksgiving for a new home and a better life."

The feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary (Aug. 15) was chosen by the Italians of Winchester. The yearly festival became a tradition and over the years evolved into a three-day affair featuring a carnival, fireworks, and a procession.

"In the mid-60s or so a lot of old timers (first and second generation Italians) passed away," said Mercurio. "Finally, because it had become such a large size and because so few people were involved in it, they could no longer carry on the feast."

Revival of the tradition began in 1976 when a small group of third-generation Italians founded the current society. They held a reception in 1979 to generate interest and sponsored the first carnival the next year.

"The only way I can measure interest is through the attendance at the feast — and that's growing every year," said Mercurio. "The question that is asked most often is 'are you going to have it again?' In fact I received a letter with a donation today from a woman in Iowa saying she had red the press release in The Star and remembered the festival from when she lived here."

The carnival has several purposes, according to Mercurio. The society's portion of the carnival profits, as well as all donations made at the temporary shrine are put into a trust fund for the building of a permanent shrine to the madonna in the Italian neighborhood.

"Our second purpose in reviving the tradition is to bring families together on an August weekend," explained Mercurio. "This was always an important goal of the society. Families scattered all over would come to Winchester on the weekend of the feast. It's always been a family affair."

This year's carnival will run from 5 to 11 p.m. Friday and from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Saturday. Both kiddie and adult rides, including a ferris wheel, will be in operation both days. The price for all rides will be 50 cents.

A temporary shrine to the madonna will be in place for the duration of the festival.

Saturday's activities will begin with a procession at 11 a.m., originating at the parking lot of St. Mary's Church on Washington st. and moving through the back streets of the Italian neighborhood, reaching Leonard Field some time after noon.

The procession will consist of members of the society accompanied by the Grenadiers Drum and Bugle Corps of Medford. The shrine, a statue of the madonna, will be wheeled on a cart as a feature of the march.

The mass will be held at 5 p.m. on the field in front of the shrine. Musical entertainment will be provided from the end of the mass until the fireworks at 10 p.m.

The carnival itself will be held rain or shine, but in case of rain the fireworks will be postponed until 9 p.m. Sunday.

The festival has carried on an important ritual for the Italians of Winchester and many of those in the Society have older relatives who helped organize the original feasts.

"I guess it's just one of the many things I inhereted from my father of the things he did," said Mercurio. His father, who lives in Florida, is one of many family members who have travelled to Winchester over the years to join in the celebration.

Local Man, 20, Is Found Drowned In Charles

A 20-year-old Winchester man was discovered drowned in the Charles River in Brighton on Aug. 6.

Metropolitan District Police recovered the body of Gary Walsh of Plato terr.from the Charles near the River st. bridge on Aug. 8. The MDC police are considering the death an accidental drowning, although the Suffolk County Medical Examiner must still perform an autopsy. The MDC is investigating the death.

Mr. Walsh, an 18-year resident of Winchester, was well-known among the town's youth, and enjoyed rock concerts and baseball. He played softball in the Winchester Men's Softball League with the Pisces Pantry team.

A 1981 graduate of Winchester High School, Mr. Walsh planned to attend a heating and air conditioning school in September.

During the summer, he was employed by his father's construction company.

Programs Will Assist Refugees

In an effort to expand the county's role in the area of human services, Middlesex County has initiated two new programs in the areas of refugee and homeless assistance.

The first, a Refugee Targeted Assistance Program, will assist Indochinese refugees in English instruction, paid job-site placement, and supportive and follow-up counseling services. The objective is to place the refugees in four work sites over an 18-month period in 15 of the southeastern cities and towns in the county. The 32 participants chosen will be trained, supported, and gradually led to self-sufficiency, the end goal.

The program is being made available through a federal grant, under the federal Refugee Resettlement Act. The county will act as the agency to administer the refugee program, and has submitted its proposal to the state.

The county has also been designated as the area convener for the distribution of Federal Emergency Management Administration (FEMA) funds. As the convener, the county will select one agency to act as the applicant to the Department of Public Welfare for the entire amount of FEMA funds allowed to the area, and that agency will then appropriate the funds to sub-applicants. These funds are specifically designed to aid the homeless, and will involve the county in another area of human services. The applicants will be selected soon and the funds should be flowing by early August.

SPCA Fund Hits $2K

With $2,088 collected from Winchester animal lovers, Yvonne Brown will continue to find homes for stray animals until she can find a home for her shelter.

Brown will use the money toward a new Winchester Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals shelter, so she can continue her 20-year crusade to save abandoned animals from being put to death. The money will also go toward boarding any strays brought to Brown until she can find that shelter.

"The people in Winchester have been wonderful to me — I was really surprised at how much they cared," said Brown of the more than 50 contributors who gave to The Star's campaign to raise money for the shelter.

For two decades, Brown took in strays, nursed them to health, neutered them, fed them and found them new homes from her rented kennel in Woburn.

Dog officers like Winchester's Nick Molea, unwilling to put their strays to death after the 10-day pound holding period expired, brought the animals to Brown, who in turn placed ads in The Boston Globe seeking people to adopt the pets.

All that ended when Brown was evicted from her kennel two months ago. She rented a second kennel to board the strays she had left, found homes for them, and then had to leave the second kennel as well.

Over the last weeks, Brown has been trying to save animals by placing them in private kennels or animal hospitals. But without a base to work from, or the certainty she could find kennel space, the job has been difficult.

"I missed one yesterday, a dog that was brought in with a crushed paw that I was going to take to the Stoneham animal hospital," said Brown. "Someone called me and said 'Please help,' because the 10 days was up and they were going to put the dog to sleep.

"Before I could get there, they put the poor dog to sleep," she continued. "These are the things that are happening."

HELP FOR THE ANIMALS — Thanks to The Winchester Star readers who responded to the newspaper's campaign to raise money for the Winchester SPCA animal shelter, Yvonne Brown has $2,088 to help continue her life's work of saving strays. Presenting Brown with the donations are The Star's general manager, Joseph Bergeron (r), and editor, David Leeco.

Brown said she still gets many calls from animal lovers, even though she doesn't have a shelter to run any more.

Thanks to the money raised from Winchester residents through The Star's campaign to save the shelter, however, she is closer to gaining enough money to build or purchase a new kennel.

Brown said that a local woman has agreed to donate $40,000 toward building or purchasing a new shelter, and she hopes to get a bank loan to cover the rest.

She has two possible locations for the shelter, in Woburn or Stoneham. In Woburn, she is hoping the city will finish its plans to build a dog pound, and then she would build a center next to it. In Stoneham, she is negotiating to buy a kennel, although the price is high at $200,000.

But Brown is determined to find somewhere to bring her strays.

"When you've lived with animals for years, raised their babies, taken care of them, it's hard breaking from them," she said. "I know that eventually, if it takes a few months or so, we will set up the shelter again."

Town Has Until Sept. 30 To Develop Fair Housing Plan

By LIZ WILLEN

If the town doesn't come up with a fair housing plan that complies with state law by Sept. 30, the state will hold up grant funds and monies for projects such as sewer and water line repair.

"We won't be eligible for any more grants unless we implement the plan, and we are determined to be in compliance," said Assistant Town Manager Rick White. White said the selectmen must draw up a housing policy stating definite goals for the town to provide both low and moderate income housing.

Town Manager Thomas Groux told the selectmen that he and White would write a plan for their review, and that they had already begun gathering data to determine the socio-economic structure of Winchester.

White said a community profile of Winchester would be taken by the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, where census data is maintained.

"From this report, we will be able to see what the ethnic make-ups of Winchester neighborhoods are, and we will know if there are any fair housing problems," White said. "You can see what your goals are once you know the make-up of neighborhoods."

White said a fair housing commission made up of a member of the Planning Board, a member of the local Housing Authority and at least three citizens would be appointed. There must also be a Director of Fair Housing who can hear complaints and make sure the legal foundation of the plan is cited.

"The committee will oversee the fair housing plan and make sure that its duties and responsibilities are carried out," White said. "There will also be an action plan suggesting goals and implementation that they will carry out."

It will be the town's responsibility to send quarterly progress reports to the state, along with the minutes of the commissions meetings, White said. The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination will oversee the compliance.

Selectmen Chairman Edward O'Connell said that the board wanted to focus on a few things, such as how the appropriate authority is carried out, and a clear road map of the committee's responsibilities.

"Give us a definition of how the committee will be constituted," O'Connell asked White, who told the board that he would give them a clear draft in time for the board to finalize the plan before Sept. 30.

Continental Cablevision Withdraws Request To Have Sept. Rock Concert

The sound of rock music will not be heard on Sept. 1 at Manchester Field as planned, because Continental Cablevision has withdrawn its request for a license to have the concert.

"I didn't feel it was right to go before the Board of Selectmen with a lot of unanswered questions," said Continental systems manager William Powell, who withdrew the request without bringing the matter before the board.

"When we do it, we want to do it right," he said, adding that there were many more details needed for preparation. "It's a complicated process to put a rock concert together."

The original idea for the concert came from the Rev. John Swencki from St. Eulalia Church, who helped Continental Cablevision recruit one of the three bands, Justin Tyme, Solution, and the Electric Eye, which was to have played.

There was also a plan to have local comedians performing between the acts, and the emcee was to have been a personality from the national cable network Music Television (MTV).

However, unforeseen details, such as specifics of sound and lighting equipment, just couldn't be put together in time.

"Everyone was real excited about having it before the start of school," said Powell. "But we should have been planning it since June, and we didn't really start planning until recently. We underestimated all the details involved."

Powell added that he hopes Continental Cablevision will be able to have the concert in the spring, providing that selectmen approve the license.

Hill St. Blues

Contractor Levels Road By Adding Soil To Tracks

Residents of Hill st. were wondering what supernatural force could have made their unsurfaced st. more passable last week.

"We came back from vacation and we kept hearing noise - screetching tires, cars, etc.," one resident said.

While residents wondered what caused the increase in traffic on both Hill st. and nearby Arthur st., the town did a little digging and found the force that leveled the road was indeed an earthly one.

Workers for Conway, a contractor working nearby, had simply leveled the road by adding soil on the tracks and packing it down, making it easier for trucks working in the area to get around the detour caused by the Swanton st. construction.

"All the trucks were driving me crazy," said one Hill st. resident.

Residents of the usually quiet, private st. could not have known that the contractor was simply trying to save them. The episode was as simple as that; the mystery was solved by the town, who dug the fill back out again, and the increase in what one resident described as "Undesirabale traffic" returned to other streets, other areas beyond Hill st. - and beyond the Twilight Zone.

Mushroom Hunters

Wherefore Art Thou Amanita

STALKING THE WILD MUSHROOM — As they do each year, mushroom aficionados came to Winchester searching for the rare Amanita Muscaria, a poisonous European mushroom found in this country only near the Wedgemere train station. The annual Mushroom Hunt is put on by Maria Maravigna, "The Mushroom Lady" of Middlesex st., who is world renown for her botanically accurate mushroom sculptures. The dry, hot weather of the past few weeks made the mushroom hunting difficult, but Pat and Jeanne Peterson (above) of Cambridge still enjoyed the view of the Aberjona River.

Magic Finger Points To Town For Original Musical

The Magic Finger Performing Arts Camp will present an original musical entitled "The Girl Who Went To The North Wind" at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, Aug. 17 at the Winchester Town Hall auditorium.

This free program is sponsored by The Winchester Junior Library for children 5 years and older, or younger if accompanied by an adult.

"The Girl Who Went To The North Wind" is a folk tale which can be found in many cultures and countries. The Magic Finger has set the play in New England in colonial times and uses American folk music and dance to enhance the story.

The story begins with an old widow who is weak and poor. She sends her daughter to the storehouse to fetch cornmeal for their dinner. Along comes the North Wind and blows the meal away. This happens a second and third time as well.

The girl visits the North Wind and learns that the meal has been scattered, but the wind gives her a magic cloth which will always provide a hearty meal when certain words are spoken over it.

On her journey home, the girl stops at an inn for the night. The guests greet us with a rousing rendition of the "Hanover winter song," followed by a reel and "The riddle" song. The girl uses her cloth to provide food for her new found friends. Unfortunately, the innkeeper steals the cloth and replaces it with a look-alike. Thus, when the girl tries the cloth at home, she is unsuccessful in preparing a meal for her mother.

The girl sets out a second time and receives a second gift from the North Wind and again stops at the inn. The guests tell stories and sing "The keeper would a-hunting go," "Scarborough Fair," and "Heigh Ho." On this visit, the second gift is also stolen.

The third and final visit to the North Wind produces a gift which enables the girl to trick the innkeeper and recover the first two gifts. On this third visit to the inn the guests dance to "The Fox" and sing the ballad of "Lord Randall."

The show concludes as the girl and her mother share their good fortune with the guests from the inn to "Viva La Compagnie," an American song despite its French title.

Members of the cast include Frances Anderson, Diana and Veronika Brozek, Christina Chang, Patricia Doherty, Nancy Deutsch and Teresa Minton from Arlington; Shana Bourque from Cambridge; Sheri Donahue from Belmont; and Melinda Lester, Rachel Victor and Julienne Webster from Lexington.

"The Girl Who Went To The North Wind" is directed by Barbara Meikle with musical direction by Carole Davidson of Winchester. Julie Hicks choreographed the dances and Wendy Campbell guided the stagecraft with the assistance of Bill Meikle.

The Winchester Junior Library is happy to host again this group which has been so enthusiastically received at their past performance. The Magic Finger Performing Arts School offers the programs as a public service to the communities served by the school.

Police Catch Man On Motorcycle With Help From Medford And K-9

After an 85-mile-per-hour chase and a hunt by the Winchester police dog, Winchester police finally got their man — a 22-year-old Lexington man wanted for the larceny of a truck on Verplast ave.

Police chased Richard Ahern all over town trying to track him down on his motorcycle, which eventually crashed in Medford. With the assistance of Medford and MDC police, who sealed off a one-block area, and K-9 Bruno, police were able to arrest Ahern, after his motorcycle crashed and he fled by foot.

Ahern's arrest and the arrest of a second man came after Officer James Gray, went to the USA skating rink on Conant rd. and discovered a 1979 Ford pick-up truck, stolen earlier from Verplast ave., with the ignition punched out.

Police then noticed a man on the corner of Conant rd. and Cross st. He was questioned as he appeared to have no reason for being at the rink, which was closed at the time.

Donald Sparks of Sewall st., Somerville was charged with larceny of a motor vehicle. Police confiscated three 10 mg. valium pills.

Sparks told police he had come to Winchester on a motorcycle with a friend who was waiting for him under the bridge on Cross st.

While Sparks was booked by Sgt. Kenneth Albertelli, Officer Paul DeLuca took off to find one of Spark's friends. On his radio, he heard another officer report he was in pursuit of a motorcyclist under the Cross st. bridge.

Officer DeLuca, upon sighting the motorcycle, gave chase, but he lost the motorcycle at Park and Highland aves. He soon sighted the motorcycle again, going south on South Border rd.

During the chase, the motorcycle reached speeds of over 85 miles-per-hour, and almost struck an MDC police car on routine patrol.

When the motorcycle finally crashed at Roosevelt cir., Medford the driver fled on foot. Officer John Guarente arrived with K-9 Bruno and MDC police sealed the area off.

Ahern was arrested and booked for larceny of a motor vehicle, failure to stop for a police officer, and operating a vehicle recklessly, after revocation of his license.

Supt. Seekers Are Male Docs

The average candidate for the superintendency of the Winchester schools is a man, probably from New England, and holds a doctoral degree.

This week, the Superintendent Search Committee filled the School Committee in on the 152 candidates who have applied for the job vacated by retired Supt. William C. MacDonald.

The committee has whittled the 152 candidates down to 20 in eight meetings, Search Committee Chairman John McElwee told the School Committee.

The Search Committee hopes to have selected five top candidates by Oct. 15, McElwee continued.

At that time, he advised the School Committee, they should interview the candidates quickly and make their decision within 10 days.

Leaving candidates hanging can only lead to losing the top candidates, he said.

"Weston now has a search on for a superintendent," he said. "They arrived at a preferred candidate, but before they could hire him he took a position elsewhere.

"The secondary candidate was chosen, but when he learned he was the second choice, he rejected," continued McElwee.

McElwee then provide the school committee with a profile of 149 of the candidates (three applications had come in too late to be included in the statistics).

Thirty-two of the candidates, or 21.5 percent, were from Massachusetts, he said, with another 46 candidates, or 30.9 percent, coming from the other New England states including New York.

Another 30 candidates (20.1 percent) came from the south, and the remaining 41 candidates (or 27.5 percent) from the west.

Three-quarters of the candidates, 109, held doctorate degrees, he continued, 39 having master's degrees and one hold a bachelor's degree.

Virtually all the candidates, 138 or 92.6 percent, were men, with only 11 woman candidates.

McElwee noted that his committee had invited 25 educators from the Winchester school system to apply for the job, and at least one Winchester school system applicant would be interviewed.

School Committee's Criteria For A New Superintendent

(The following is the School Committee's criteria for choosing a new superintendent of schools. The criteria was turned over to the Screening Committee on Tuesday night, with School Committee Chairman Constance Papas noting, the memorandum "is fairly broad — we want to leave you as much latitude as possible to use your judgment — but it is a synthesis of our expectations and the expectations of the community.") "As public education has become more and more complex, its management has become more and more difficult. Greater skills are required for the successful management of today's schools. Nothing that the board does is more important than employing and retaining a professionally prepared and dedicated superintendent."

Even more so now in the '80s "a superintendent is expected to provide increased leadership in the learning process, become ever more student oriented, face taxpayers' revolts..., deal with mandated funding reforms, declining enrollments and test scores, new mandates for the handicapped, full-scale involvement of the courts in school governance, competency-based testing, "back to basics," women's rights and Title IX, even collective bargaining..." (Selecting a Superintendent, Development Series No. 2, AASA and NSBA)

The serious problems facing the nation's educational systems have recently received widespread public attention with the release of three reports: one from the National Commission on Excellence in Education, another by the Twentieth Century Fund, and the third from the Education Commission of the States on Education for Economic Growth. Winchester's new Superintendent will have to deal with all of these problems and their challenge in a decade beset with educational upheavals, both financial and philosophical. This demands the recruitment of a trained, experienced educational manager and leader of premier quality.

The School Committee has taken the first steps by appointing and funding a blue ribbon screening committee and in developing the following profile which has evolved from interactions with people representing the full spectrum of the community and the system populations.

The successful candidate should be first and foremost an effective educational manager and leader. Thus, he or she must possess those leadership qualities which will permit the teachers, staff and students to develop to their maximum capabilities. These qualities come from an innate reaction to the knowledge of and the experience with such fields as Educational Administration, Finance, Management, the Behavioral Sciences, as well as one's own discipline.

Such an educational leader must also be a proven doer. Thus the successful candidate will have demonstrated experience, quality education and impeccable credentials in most of the particular subsets of the system such as teaching, scholarship, research, administration, the principalship and the like. He or she should have an auditable record detailing examples of inventive leadership, problem solving, personnel motivation and, especially, demonstrated educational scholarship sufficent to motivate, the same in others. He or she is someone who is career motivated, probably capable and desirous of achieving, in time, at levels above the superintendency.

We would see the Superintendent in charge of short and long range strategic planning, day-to-day system operations, evaluations and as the representative of the the system to the public. The candidate's educational philosophy in areas such as curriculum design, personnel management and faculty development should be compatible with the relevent input in order to fashion an operational system dedicated to academic excellence that now and in the future will produce what the Winchester community defines and expects.

Specifically, the candidates should be measured as to:

(1) Personal
- humane perspective in judgments
- personable, credible
- strong communications and public relations skills
- ability to instill confidence in community for schools
- commitment to community

(2) Educational
- Master's degree minimum, Doctorate preferred
- Massachusetts certification eligibility
- quality thesis or research equivalent
- demonstrated scholarship

(3) Educational Manager and Leader
- commitment to academic excellence
- effective confident leadership and management abilities
- abililty to motivate and develop staff
- ability to delegate authority, to formulate and administer policy
- ability to plan, execute and evaluate
- strength in faculty development, curriculum design and facilities development
- establish rapport with students

(4) Finance
- demonstrated experience in budget development and financial management
- ability and eagerness to participate in labor relations and negotiations

Ideally, the next Superintendent would satisfy these guidelines to an outstanding degree. Realistically, however, this person should measure up to these standards to the maximum degree possible. With this profile as your guideline, the School Committee charges you to recommend to us those finalists from whom we can select Winchester's next Superintendent, someone who will best serve the needs of our students and our community.

Republicans Hold Town Meeting

A Winchester Republican Town Committee meeting was called for last week to discuss official political business and subjects pertaining to the coming 1983-84 season. The meeting was held at the home of Chairman and Mrs. Rushton Harwood.

Harwood noted that a member-count required by the Office of the Secretary of State every four years was due. In order to be an officially recognized Republican Town Committee, each committee must have no less than three members and not more than 35. In the past, Winchester is one of the towns that has always had the full allotment of 35 members plus associate and honorary members. The members present voted, after a discussion, to continue to set the membership number at 35.

The subject of the September fund-raising party was also on the agenda. This affair, initiated in 1968 by the Winchester Republican Town Committee, has become a well attended, traditional GOP event in Winchester.

The first party was held at the Theos Thompson home, 14 Everett ave. on Sept. 27, 1968. Dorothy Thompson, an associate member of the Town Committee, opened her home and tennis court for the event. Town Committee members in charge were Finance Chairman Mrs. Robert W. Reynolds, State Committeewoman Mrs. William D. Barone, and Town Committee Chairman Sherman W. Saltmarsh Jr. Tickets were $1.

Encouragaed by the large attendance and substantial sum raised by the affair, members later voted to make it an annual means of raising funds. Various Republican townspeople have opened their homes for similar events each September, thereby earning necessary money for the official business of the Winchester Republican Town Committee, especially during election years.

Some time later, the Women's Republican Club of Winchester asked the Republican Town Committee if they could join in this successful effort and, since 1974, the September parties have been sponsored by the two GOP organizations combined.

Harwood reports that the male members of the Town Committee have usually tended bar and provided certain "liquid items," the women have supplied hors d'oeuvres, and those who preferred to contribute financially have done so. Many of the women were members of both organizations.

Mrs. Lawrence Flowers, who worked on several of the affairs in years past and chaired the 1980 event, is the Town Committee representative on this year's fund-raising committee. She will be assisted in the area of telephoning and ticket-selling by other members of the Town Committee. The party this year will be on Friday, Sept. 16, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William B. A Salute To Those Who Serve

Winchester Seniors Association Serves The Senior Citizens Through Activities And Services

By TOM HUNTINGTON

The United States is now going through a slow but steady change that some have labelled "The Graying of America." The average age of the American citizen is on the rise, and as it changes, so, too, does the perception of the role of the senior citizens in this country. Today, more and more people realize the value that senior citizens can contribute to our country.

The senior citizens of Winchester have proven beyond the shadow of a doubt their ability to get things done themselves. Last April marked the fifth anniversary of the Jenks Center, a meeting point for Winchester seniors that was constructed through their own efforts. These last five years have proven to be successful ones for the Winchester Seniors Association, (WSA) and a sign of the growth and activity that the organization can look forward to in the future.

The WSA is an independent agency. It works closely with the town's Council on Aging which has an 11-member board composed of the selectmen's appointees. The council is basically an advisory group, looking into various things for the good of the seniors, and leaving the actual implementation to the WSA.

"Anybody 60 or over is automatically a member of the Winchester Seniors Association," says Pauline McGuigan, the current president. "We take care of all the seniors in Winchester. Some are active and some are not. We have a lovely building, and many, many activities, which the Winchester seniors paid for themselves."

"We have an administrator, Barbara Ciampa, who is paid, and a part-time secretary who is paid, and the rest of the center is run by volunteers," McGuigan adds.

"We have one big fundraiser every year, which is a fair that pulls in $10,000-12,000, and then we have our volunteer contributions every year that we do very well in and that helps keep the center running," McGuigan says.

This year the fair, which will be the eighth annual, is slated for the 6th and 7th of October. "It takes a lot of people who work very hard," McGuigan says.

One thing that McGuigan stresses is that the Winchester seniors take care of themselves, in marked contract with the traditional notion that older people, despite the benefit of having lived long lives of their own, are somehow not capable of taking charge past a certain age.

"We are not supported by the town," McGuigan says. "Not that they're not good to us, I don't mean that, but the seniors take care of the seniors."

And quite successfully, too, with the Jenks Center having proven to be everything its founders hoped it would be. "We have programs coming out of our ears here," McGuigan reports. "We have between 900-1000 people in here a week. We have someone who teaches sewing, another one who teaches macrame, we have exercise classes. I just can't tell you.

"We have approximately 4,000 seniors," she continues. "Not all of them take part. A lot of them are 60 to 65 and still working. There are a few of them who spend many, many hours down here, believe me."

McGuigan is justifiably proud of the work that the Winchester seniors did themselves to raise money for the construction of the center. Over six years ago, a volunteer group of Winchester citizens began collecting money through such events as bridge parties, fashion shows and even a door-to-door collection, which McGuigan says was "a big effort." But it was a successful effort, which raised $100,000 in a short period of time.

When James L. Jenks Jr., after whom the center is named, donated $250,000, the seniors had enough for the completion of the project, though McGuigan feels that with the crew they had, they could have raised all the money themselves, if necessary. "That's why we got it in a year and a half," she says. "We would have gotten it, but it would have taken longer."

"We celebrated our fifth anniversary in April," McGuigan recounts. "We had a big afternoon reception. Cable TV came in and took movies of every single program we have here. They took five hours of us, which they boiled down, and we had a 45-minute tape which we had going all day, so people could see all the programs. We had about 300 people. Most of the former administrators were here, too.

"We have beautiful facilities here," she says. "We have everything you could want here." While the center does not provide any overnight accommodations and operates strictly as a day activity center, coffee and tea are always available, as well as an occasional soup and sandwich lunch.

McGuigan gives a lot of the credit for the way things have worked out with the Council on Aging, chaired by Bob Mulford. She says the working relationship between the council and the WSA is "marvelous. That's why we have such a successful senior center."

In a way, the center is too successful, if such a thing is possible. "We've started looking into building an addition," McGuigan reports. "We need it, because this place has taken off beyond our wildest dreams. The summer is comfortable, but during the winter there are days when we don't have one bit of space to have our meetings. We had to put the administrator out of her office; some of the men play cards in the kitchen; it's unbelievable.

"We'd like to put three or four more rooms in," she says. "We have a huge meeting room and we could extend that, and put in some extra meeting rooms, and a room so they can still have a sculpture class and an art class. And we need a lot more storage space."

This new project is still in the planning stage, without any concrete facts and figures on paper yet, but one thing that the Winchester Seniors Association has proven adept at in the past is fundraising. "We have every area of expertise and they all work together," President McGuigan says. "This is the most together group I've ever known."

Film Violence Isn't Art

By Terry Marotta

I have this cousin who's an actor in Hollywood., He's been in all kinds of movies and television shows over the years. I'll be watching some film or TV series and suddenly there he'll be, playing the deranged guy, or the lonely guy, or just the nice quiet guy that works with computers all day.

Whenever I see him, it's a big surprise. I'll never get used to it, I guess. "That's my cousin!" I yell, and everyone in the movie theatre or the living room turns to look at me with contempt and disbelief.

The point is, this cousin of mine appeared a year or more ago in this big-budget horror movie, an updated version of a classical thriller, with a textbook "creature" and all. He had the dubious honor of playing the creature's first victim, the first one to be murdered by it. A prime role, and a highly visible one. You think he'd be delighted with it.

Not so though. On the contrary. When the movie was first released, my cousin suggested to some of us that we NOT go see it, so gory, so mindlessly violent was it. He implied that we could better spend our money in some other fashion.

Well, I took his advice; I stayed away from the movie. But six months later I saw some still photos from it in a magazine called Special Effects, or Hollywood Gross-Outs, or something along those lines. Sure enough. There was my cousin, moments before he was "killed." And sure enough, his murderer, the creature, was disgusting-looking, an amalgam of every known or imagined horror conjured up by visions of the graveyard and the dissection table.

I came to the conclusion then, looking at that magazine, that there really are some things we're better off not seeing, both in real life and in the cinematic simulation.

Bloodletting is bad for us to watch. Dismemberment is bad too, and scenes in which people are slowly and horribly disemboweled.

There's a genre of film out there that deals obsessively with such things. These films show people having their eyes put out, or their tongues slashed off; people whose splintered bones spring forth from tattered flesh, people whose arterial blood spurts in sticky geysers.

Well, my opinion as to showing this sort of thing on the screen is not only that it's unnecessary and faintly lewd; it's dangerous.

It's dangerous, I believe, for us to become inured to the sight of blood, even stage-blood like they use in the movies; dangerous for us, and our children too, incidentally, to become accustomed to the image of these cinematic snuff-outs, these video exterminations.

We are changed by some sights, I am convinced, as one who witnesses a fatal car crash is forever changed, or one who returns from a war.

Individuals changed in this way didn't generally volunteer for the experience in most cases. They didn't come forward and say, show me what two tons of metal moving at 70 miles per hour will do to the fragile human frame. They didn't say, show me my friend's face as it's torn by a grenade from off the front of his skull.

Individuals changed in this way have not volunteered to witness these events.

They certainly haven't paid money to witness them. Which, in a way, is what we're doing when we attend movies replete with gore and violence.

We're volunteering to witness things that people in some parts of the world pray every night to forget. We're lining up and declaring ourselves fans - partakers in vicarious blood-lust.

Life in these times can be pretty scary, granted.

And maybe some folks take comfort in pretending that the bad guy and what the bad guy does, is all illusion, is all a Hollywood fake: something we go look at to feed a ritual revulsion for in darkened movie theaters, something up there, on the screen, outside us. And not down here, in our seats, within us.

I can understand that, in a way.

I know we're all scared, and we're just trying to exorcise some 20th century demons on that big silver screen.

But let's not make our demons our idols. Let's not raise violence to an art form.

My cousin was right. I knew when I met him 25 years ago, that I liked him. Now I know why.

Swim Instructors Praised For Work

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Before Mary Beth Fennell and Andrea Demars head back to Bowdoin College, may we publicly express our appreciation for the tremendous job they did running Leonard's Beach swimming program this summer?

Last year The Star published a letter of mine griping about the snarling life guards, the tense atmosphere and the lack of facilities for taller youngsters who hadn't yet passed the 75-yard-swim test. This year Leonard's is a different place with an intermediate swimming area and a marked improvement in the attitude of the guards. They talk and joke with the kids and are more eager to help swimmers use the docks rather than discouraging them from going out there as has been the case in the past.

Can we guess that this change in attitude is due in part to Mary Beth's and Andrea's cheerful attitude and calm leadership? Mary Beth taught my son swimming for many years at Wedge Pond and this year my daughter had the good fortune to be in her class of non-swimmers. Each year when Mary Beth goes off to college, we wonder if it will be the last year we see her at Leonard's. And while we know she and Andrea will inevitably go on to bigger and better things, we'd secretly like them to stay at Leonard's forever!

Sincerely
Elisabeth, David and
Joyce Westner

Camp Counselors Made Summer Fun

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

As summer draws to a close, it's time to give the town's camp counsellors the recognition they deserve. Camp Sunshine and Camp Superfriends were terrific and thanks go to Tricia, Chris, Maria and David for their boundless energy, infectious enthusiasm and well-organized programs this year.

The camps in the past have had uneven levels of success but this year's staff seems so much more self-confident and the activities were well run and delightful. It was especially nice to have a male counselor and the kids enjoyed David tremendously. Each week's fun, culminating in a fantastic field trip, was marvelous and this family looks forward to next summer's programs with anticipation.

Sincerely,
Florence Maguire

The Star Scooped City Press

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Shame on The Star for not sharing in the metropolitan press, generally, its discovery — first disclosed in "Beacon Hill Roll Call" on July 28 — that former Gov. Edward King continues to sign legislation passed by the Great and Grand Court.

Fascinating! A real scoop!

Sincerely yours,
E. L. Pattullo
48 Fletcher st.

(Editor's note: The Beacon Hill Roll Call of July 28 was a recap of key measures passed during the 1982 legislative session, when King was still in office. However, being hungry for a real scoop, we have sent a reporter to the State House to see if, indeed, King still haunts his old office, pen in hand.)

Center Needed Planned Restaurant

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I am writing to express my disappointment that another person with plans for a business in our center has withdrawn his proposal.

I do think that it is necessary for everyone concerned about the revitalization of Winchester center to help in any way possible those business people interested in our community.

I'm not familiar with the details of Mr. Oram's proposal, but from a laymen's viewpoint it sounds as if it would be a delightful addition to our downtown and one worth supporting.

I do hope that Mr. Oram will reconsider and that anyone who really cares about creating a more vital center would work actively to support and encourage new businesses to come to our town.

Sincerely,
Catherine S. Alexander

Police And Fire Action Prevented Pain

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

This is a belated letter of thanks and appreciation to the members of the Winchester Police and Fire Depts.

I was injured by a car near the intersection of Washington and Swanton sts. in May, and the whole incident was handled very expertly by both departments. I am sure this enabled me to make progress and recover more rapidly than usual for these types of injuries, "according to doctors."

So again, my heartfelt thanks. May a lot of good things happen to all.

Sincerely,
Bill Jordan

Police Complimented For Investigation

(Editor's note: The following letter was sent to Police Chief John P. McHugh, with a copy going to The Star.)

Dear Sir:

I wish to take this opportunity, with apologies for the delay, to express my appreciation to the members of your department for their fine work relative to the assault on me last December.

Although I was not in very good shape when found, Sgt. James Pierce and, I understood, Officers David Poole and James Gallant were so skillful in getting information from me that the two assailants were arrested in Cambridge an hour or so later, in almost just the time it took them to get back from where they dumped me off.

Sgt. Pierce continued to be supportive through the identification and grand jury period, and your officers' work was so solid that both men pleaded guilty to all charges filed against them and have already started serving long jail sentences. My family, I know, would also like to express their appreciation to Lt. Andrew Crawford for his sympathetic attitude.

I have taken the liberty of sending a copy of this letter to The Winchester Star. Given the bad publicity surrounding some police departments, I feel that the people of Winchester should know that they have every right to be proud of the officers serving them.

Sincerely,
Edward Jay Allan

Bottle Bill Is Cleaning Up Town

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

It is my observation that the Bottle Bill is working very well in Winchester.

No longer are our street corners littered with empty six-packs and broken glass every weekend. There also seems to be less "fast-food" throw-aways too.

As a daily walker around Winchester, I ask any disbeliever to walk between Ginn Field and the railroad station and observe the difference now. It was paved with broken bottles previously.

The kids may not pick up and return cans and bottles, but their elders do! Any early morning walk will attest to that.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

While some bills have become law and hundreds of others still await legislative action, many bills have already been defeated and are dead for the 1983 session. Many bills are refiled year after year, and although sponsors often get discouraged, they know that it often takes years of defeat and work to gain support for a particular measure to pass.

This week's report looks at bills which have been defeated on roll call votes in the House during the first part of the 1983 session. The House and Senate are still meeting informally and will resume formal sessions after Labor Day.

Insurance (H 2163) - House rejected 126-13, a bill establishing a special commission to study the possible establishment of an auto insurance company owned and operated by the state. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).

Rep. Sherman Saltmarsh voted no.

Senior News

Volunteers Needed For Study

Senior volunteers are being sought for a research project helping stroke victims communicate.

As part of this project, a study is being conducted to relate features of communication devices such as number of keys and number of words to levels of cognitive abilities in normal adults. This information will be used to select for each disabled patient a device which will not only be within his or her abilities, but will be easy for him or her to learn and still offer an efficient, useful means of communication.

Under a research contract from the National Institute of Communicative Disorders and Strokes, the Tufts-New England Medical Center and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology are developing a computer-aided prescription procedure to guide the selection of communication aids for patients who have lost the ability to speak due to motor handicap.

Participants will be paid $3 per hour and will be asked to take some tests of cognitive abilities (e.g., spelling, reading, memory) which have been adapted for motor handicapped patients. They will then be asked to learn to operate a number of communication devices, spending two-one hour sessions with each device.

The Tufts-New England Medical Center and MIT desire to include some senior citizens in this study since many of the patients who have become non-speaking because of neurological diseases are in this age-group.

Seniors agreeing to participate in the study will be asked to spend approximately 22 hours working on the project. The time will be spread over a period of two or three months, no more than four hours in a week. The work sessions will take place in Winchester. Transportation will be provided if necessary.

If you are interested, please contact Barbara Ciampa, Program Administrator at the Jenks Senior Center.

Support Group Offered

To help those who are faced with their new roles of caring for an elderly relative, Winchester Hospital will offer a support group beginning Tuesday, Aug. 23. "You and Your Aging Relative" will be held every other Tuesday for six weeks from 7 - 8:30 p.m. in the oncology suite in Russell House, adjacent to the hospital's parking garage.

Dorothy Roemer, RN, a member of Winchester Hospital's social service department, stressed that it is important for people to attend all sessions as they receive support from one another through participation during the six weeks of meeting together. People learn that they are not alone in such a situation as becoming a caretaker, and that they have similar experiences.

The dates of the meetings are Tuesdays, Aug. 23, Sept. 6, 20, October 4, 18 and Nov. 1. There is no fee for the classes.

The sessions are also helpful, Roemer, feels for those who are looking ahead to their own elder years, and possibly wondering what will happen to them, and how they can prepare for later years.

Role reversal of becoming the parent of one's own parent causes a range in both the elderly person and the caretaker — emotions which, according to Roemer, can be stressful for them. She will help the group to understand such emotions as anger, frustration and sometimes bitterness and resignation, and will show ways of taking care of oneself while caring for someone else.

Resource guests will be present at some of the sessions to explain to participants where help is available outside the home.

Silver Haired Reps Needed

Anyone who is 60 or over and interested in serving on the Silver-Haired Legislature may obtain nomination papers at the Jenks Senior Center. The election takes place on Sept. 21, but nomination petitions must be filed by Aug. 19, at the Massachusetts Department of Elder Affairs, 38 Chauncy st., Boston 02111 by 5 p.m.

The seats for which Winchester residents may run are senator and representative. Margaret Borrgaard of Winchester and Marion Fitzpatrick of Lexington have held these seats in the General Court during the current year.

Richard H. Rowland, executive secretary of the Dept. of Elder Affairs, states that "as a program that prepares 200 individuals each year to participate effectively in the Silver-Haired Legislature it can create valuable community resources. Elders trained to understand and utilize the legislative system, administrative process, community services and consumer rights will return to their communities with much to offer and share, both with their elderly colleagues and with their neighbors of all ages."

Nomination is secured by obtaining 25 signatures of persons 60 or over who are registered voters living in the district in which the candidate seeks to run.

Barbara Ciampa, Program Administrator for the Council on Aging and the Winchester Seniors Assn., will coordinate the Silver-Haired Legislature election in Winchester on Sept. 21, 1983.

The major work of the Silver-Haired Legislature takes place in early November. It is hoped that dedicated and effective Winchester elder advocates will wish to participate in this year's election.

Meals On Wheels Volunteers Needed To Aid Homebound

Winchester's Meals-on-Wheels, a non-profit organization which provides nutritional meals five days a week to homebound Winchester residents, needs more volunteers in order that the program can expand and reach more deserving citizens.

While the commitment is small, one or two days per month from the hours of 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., the rewards are great.

You will get the opportunity to help many people regain or maintain their health by delivering the meals. You will also meet and become friends with some of the nicest, most pleasant and most gracious people in town.

Please call Louie M. Minniti, 6 Goddu st., and become involved in this most worthwhile program.

'I believe in taking risks.'

He'll Try Anything Once — And Probably Succeed

By LIZ WILLEN

John Fuchs has a winning way about him.

The 18-year-old Amberwood dr. resident has racked up awards for his outstanding skills as a tennis player, starred in Winchester High School productions and been one of three freshmen to get a part in a Boston College musical while working a 20 hour a week part time job in Burlington and keeping a close watch on the stocks he's invested his money in.

"I'll try anything once," said Fuchs, who radiates confidence and energy. "I do whatever I want to do but I don't get obsessed with it. I just do my best."

Everytime John Fuchs does his best at something, he ends up a winner.

When he first took up tennis in eighth grade, he was lucky to make the last doubles team at his junior high school in Syosset, Long Island. The following year he was their first singles player.

When he decided to try theatre, he landed a part in the first musical he'd ever been in (Winchester High School's production of Damn Yankees) and then starred in its next production.

When he bought stock in Wang Computers, he watched them increase and decided that he'd be well suited for a career as a fincancial investment analyst.

First and foremost, however, Fuchs has made his reputation known to Winchester sports fans as a winner on the tennis courts.

When his family moved to Winchester, John made the first doubles team at Winchester High as a junior and enjoyed a record of 19 wins and one loss with his partner Colin Green.

As a senior at Winchester High School, John played first doubles with Mark Herlihy and won the Boston Globe All-Scholastic State Award. The team was named "Player of the Year" by The Woburn Times. It was the first time the award was ever given to a doubles team.

"We didn't like losing at all that spring," Fuchs said, recalling the 32 straight sets that he and Herlihy won. "But after all that winning, I decided to take a break from tennis. "I was getting bored with it."

Fuchs said he was also disgusted with some of the attitudes of different tennis players he encountered. "It's really depressing to see how different people become when they get on the court," he said. "I could never take it that seriously. I never got obnoxious or disrespectful to my opponent."

Fuchs recalled a match he played in Lexington. "People almost climbed over the net and killed us," he said. "I guess it's different when you're losing."

Fuchs was also the recipient of the KenTew Award, given annually by the Winchester Indoor Tennis Club. "I think I got the award because I was the good will person on the team," laughed Fuchs. "I just couldn't be that competitive about it."

Fuchs dropped tennis after winning all the awards, opting to develop his singing career instead. "I got involved in acting and singing at Winchester High and almost gave up tennis back then," said Fuchs, who had never been in a play before his senior year. "When I won a part in the play, I discovered that I'm a good singer, too."

Fuchs began taking singing lessons that year from Eileen Morman through Winchester Adult Education, and has been at it ever since.

"I practice two hours a day now, and I plan to enroll in Belmont Academy of Music this fall to develop some of my high notes," he said. "I'm also looking for a back-up band, because I'd really like to perform as a soloist."

Fuchs did get an opportunity to perform this spring in Boston College's production of "The Mikado." As the first male chorus member, he was the highest ranked freshman.

"When I saw a notice for the audition, I just decided to go for it," he remembered. "I could have played tennis, and there is a possibility that I will play on the Boston College Tennis team next spring. But first I want to land a lead in the fall production."

It rarely occurs to Fuchs that he won't be able to do something he wants to do. "I know things come easily to me, but I don't

'I do whatever I want to do but I don't get obsessed with it. I just do my best... I know things come easily to me but I don't really know why. But I will work at something if I have to.'

The award, the highest given to a Rotarian, was presented by outgoing President Sal Porras (right). Named after Paul Harris, the founder of the Rotary, the award is held in highest esteem. Local Performers Will Be Part Of Boston Summerfest

Imagine performing on the same stage that the Boston Pops Orchestra and the Boston Ballet use. Imagine singing and dancing in front of thousands of people from the Greater Boston area.

On Aug. 14, eight Winchesterites won't have to imagine — they'll be strutting their stuff on the Hatch Shell stage as part of Summerfest 4, an annual celebration of the arts along the shores of the Charles River put on by the city of Boston, the MDC, and The Boston Globe.

These local residents are members of The Eulalians, a group of singers and dancers based in St. Eulalia's parish, which serves both Winchester and Arlington. Marilyn Poole, an Arlington resident, is the director of the group.

"We had done another free performance, and one of the people from the mayor's office saw it," Poole explains. "He called and asked us to do it."

It's been a real scramble to put together a full-hour show on such short notice, she says. "We've been rehearsing at people's homes, and we've been practicing dance numbers at 10 o'clock at night because of this heat," Poole says. But the chance to perform at the Hatch Shell was too good to pass up.

The day-long Summerfest will have performances at three locations: a stage behind the Museum of Science, one near the Community Boating center, and at the Hatch Shell.

"We'll be performing at the Hatch Shell from 6 to 7," Poole says. The group will perform different kinds and styles of music, to appeal to a broad audience.

"We'll do a medley of folk songs people can sing along to, like "If I Had A Hammer," and "This Land Is Your Land," she says enthusiastically. "We're doing some 50s stuff, the Everly Brothers' "All I Have To Do Is Dream," and that kind of music.

"We'll do some Jane Oliver and Melissa Manchester, John Denver, and "If," by that old group, Bread," she says, ticking off a memorized list. "We're trying to mix and match the styles and eras."

The dancers will do a "Flashdance," and a "Stray Cat Strut," Poole adds, and a soft rock group, drawn from The Eulalians, may be part of the show, too.

"This year they're emphasizing the handicapped and their capabilities and abilities to contribute," Poole says. She thinks The Eulalians will reinforce that theme, because one of the members, Andrea Pothier of Mayflower rd., is a wheelchair user. "Andrea sings and plays guitar with us," Poole says.

"I'm doing the emceeing for our hour, and the man from the mayor's office asked if I would be available to give out an award," Poole adds. "They're giving the Kennedys an award for 20 years of service to the handicapped."

The Winchester residents who will perform next Sunday are Michael Cammarata, Miriam Jamgochian, Andrea Pothier, Kathi DiChiappari, Kathi Campbell, Gene Megna, David Cerundolo, and Karla Messuri.

Summerfest 4 will begin with a 9 a.m. road race. The festival itself begins at 11 a.m., and continues all day until 10 p.m. For further information, contact the Mayor's Office of Handicapped Affairs, or Janice Hollop, director of Summerfest, at her Washington st., Newton office.

Scholarship Awarded To James G. Waites

SCHOLARSHIP — Salvador Porras of the Winchester Rotary Club presents a $1,000 scholarship check to Berta Swanson, chairman of the Winchester Scholarship Foundation Selection Committee. The check will go to James G. Waite of Appalachian rd. (center) who was chosen as the recipient of the Winchester Rotary Charitable Fund Scholarship Award. Waite will attend St. Michael's College in Vermont in the fall. (Staff photo by Dave Leeco) own lives can make their children scapegoats," said Bourne. "And parents can also be resentful of their freedom that having children took away. Suddenly, they feel tremendously burdened and they take it out on the children."

★Child Abuse

Unemployment, money worries and the economy have aiso placed a huge burden on parents. The resulting stress can have a big impact on the parents' relationship and behavior towards their children.

"The biggest source of stress in a community like Winchester is social and economic pressure," said Dr. Frieda Lang, a Winchester clinical psychologist. "The pressure to achieve forces a lot of absenteeism on the part of the father, and the mother is left alone with the children a lot."

There are also many other instances with one parent being left alone with the children. The extraordinarily high divorce rate has forced a lot of parents to bring up children alone, and the strain of being a single parent can take its toll.

Finally, the pressure to earn money can be felt as strongly in Winchester as it is in many poorer communities. "Someone can be earning $60,000 a year and wishing it were $100,000," said Bourne. "It doesn't matter. Even affluent, professional people can beat their children when they feel such stress."

The stress doesn't necessarily mean that parents will beat their children, but other forms of abuse, such as verbal threats or even emotional neglect, can be the result of the parent's preoccupation with these difficult issues.

Also, the parents' reactions to stress don't necessarily lead to a report of child abuse. In fact, the number of reported cases of child abuse in Winchester is estimated to be between six and eight per year by Winchester Hospital, and the Police Dept. has had only three cases reported in the past two years.

However, experts are quick to point out that there is often a huge discrepancy between the number of actual cases and the number of reported cases. "The figure of three reported cases since November at Winchester Hospital is gross under-reporting," said Bourne.

Bourne explained that the figures were low because people will go to their private physician in a town like Winchester as opposed to a hospital. A case is much less likely to be identified and reported as child abuse by a private physician, Bourne said.

New reporting laws, introduced last April and signed on July 14, have already begun to increase the number of child abuse cases reported to the Dept. of Social Services and the district attorney. The law requires cooperation between the various agencies and professionals involved in a child abuse case by easing the method of reporting and clarifying the standards for handling a reported child abuse case.

Changes in the laws were implemented so that more people would recognize and report child abuse cases. "I think that as people become more aware of the problem, they will report it," said Inspector Beaton. He urges people in in the community to contact him if they know of any cases. "We do expect to get more reports now," he said.

Once a case is reported, to either the police or the hospital, it is referred to the Dept. of Social Services which then screens the case to determine whether abuse or neglect has actually taken place.

If the case is an emergency, a visit from a social worker is arranged in 24 hours. If it is not an emergency, the visit must take place within seven days.

Dania Jekel, a program specialist for the Dept. of Social Services, said that the number of reports has increased steadily in the past few months. "All the recent publicity will further increase our reports," she said.

The increase in reports, as well as the public's awareness of the problem, unfortunately can't alleviate the stress that most experts believe is at the root of child abuse.

Both Bourne and McHugh advise parents who may be feeling a lot of stress to contact Parents Anonymous, Parents Aides or the Massachusetts Society For the Prevention Of Cruelty To Children. Bourne also said that children who are old enough to recognize their parents' problem should seek help themselves.

"Children can walk into the emergency room of a hospital and file a child abuse and neglect form, or talk to someone on the hospital staff," he said.

Elizabeth Kenney, Director of Social Services at Winchester Hospital, pointed out other resources that Winchester has available for parents who may be abusing their children.

"There is the Office For Children on Church st., the clergy, and a lot of caring social workers," she said. "It's a very responsive community."

Experts hope that the number of people seeking help, advice and support will at least help to prevent child abuse in many cases.

"Hopefully, people who are aware of the problem will now do something about it," said Beaton.

"The program gives the parent some time to think about his or her own needs and gives them support and caring," said program supervisor Nancy McHugh. "Hopefully, the parent in turn will give the child the love and care that he needs."

During the course of the time spent together, the volunteer and the parent can discuss many of the issues that may be causing the parent some difficulty.

Parent Aides has a very specific goal, which is simply to make parents feel a lot better about themselves. In turn, the children benefit and many potential problems can be avoided.

"The aids focus in on the parent and what they are doing right," said McHugh. They may feel like total failures, but this certainly isn't the case. Often times, you just can't give what you haven't had, and many of these parents have never had anyone who just cared about them."

McHugh said that parents often repeat patterns they grow up with, making it much more likely that a parent who has been abused as a child himself will be an abuser.

"No matter how determined a parent may be not to repeat the pattern, the odds are against it," she said. "Much of it is instinctive, and it takes a great deal of conscious work to change the problem."

Parent Aides hopes to increase the parents' awareness of these tendencies to repeat patterns, by providing an outlet for discussion, and, in many instances, a friend.

Parent Aides meet once a week with the parent. All the meetings are kept confidential, as is the name of the family. The aide and the parent, who may have read about the program and asked for an aide, or been recommended by the Department of Social Services or another agency, decide all the details of the meetings, such as where and when they will meet.

The 15 aides, seven of whom are Winchester residents, receive brief descriptions of the parents asking for aides after their five weeks of training. They can then choose which parents they would like to spend time with.

At the moment, all of the aides are women, but McHugh would welcome male volunteers. Anyone who is interested in either becoming an aide, or meeting with one, should contact Monique Doelling at the Mass. Department of Social Services office in Arlington.

frustrations."

Peers encourage those seeking help, support, or just a place where they can feel comfortable talking about the difficulties of being a parent to contact PA at 482-4695, or at their toll-free number, 1-800-822-1250.

Although there is no Winchester chapter of PA, residents can attend weekly meetings in Woburn, Wilmington, Waltham, Reading or any one of 35 state chapters. There is also the possibility that a PA group will be beginning in Arlington in the near future.

The group is run by a professional social worker or psychologist who is assisted by a parent volunteer within the group. The group never exceeds 10 members.

Parents Anonymous has grown tremendously since it began in 1968, and recent research has shown it to be the most effective form of treatment for child abusers, as well as an effective preventative measure.

However, the biggest problem is getting people to recognize that they may have a problem, Peers said.

"People think that child abuse just couldn't happen in a nice community like Winchester," he said. "The hardest thing is to get people to admit that it is going on, and then they must seek help."

"There is a lot of stigma attached to admitting that there are problems in the family," said Nancy McHugh, who is the group leader for Parents Anonymous in Wilmington. "There is a lot of fear about damaging careers and reputations in a town like Winchester."

Peers said that those who do seek help soon realize that they are not alone. "People aren't trained to become parents and there is nothing wrong with seeking help," he said. "Stress is the common denominator. Those who come to meetings soon realize this, and find that there are other parents who have similar problems."

Peers noted that talking about one's angers and frustrations with others can be a tremendous calming force. "It helps to realize that you are not alone," he said.

Group members can call one another at a time of particular stress, much the same way that alcoholics will call fellow members of Alcoholics Anonymous before, after or during a bout with drinking. In this way, group members learn to support and help one another, Peers said.

As more people in the community realize that problems of child abuse (whether verbal, emotional or physical) and sexual abuse (which experts consider the best-kept secret within families where it occurs) do exist, they will begin to seek help, according to Peers.

"We're here if someone needs us," he said, adding that a group could be formed in Winchester if enough interest was shown. "Our group attempts to break down all barriers. If necessary, we'll even provide child care and transportation. One of our slogans is 'Come home to the family you never had.'"

Peers hopes that the trust and support members learn to give each other in the group will become foundations of their own families.

Principal Grenzeback's Letter Of Resignation

Dr. Robert G. Forest
Acting Superintendent of Schools
Winchester, Massachusetts

Dear Bob:

Please submit to the School Committee my resignation, effective at the end of the school year just concluded.

My departure will ease the situation for you and others, and I will get to enjoy my two most favorite months, September and June! (As you well know, in our work these peak months always come and go before one can even be aware.)

I regret that I cannot neatly package the knowledge, experience, and wisdom acquired during my professional career and present it to one entering teaching or administration. Perhaps I shall write about these years in Winchester; but what to tell and what NOT to tell!

I am grateful for the blessings of a very happy personal and professional life; and for the privilege of working with and for the nicest segment of human society - children! Although changing to another school can be stimulating, I have learned from my experience in four sections of town that the problems are equally challenging, the teachers equally hard-working, and the children equally delightful.

You are a real educator, Bob, and will do a splendid job in your new role. My very best wishes to you.

Sincerely
Martha C. Grenzeback

P.S. As you must be aware, I have knowingly forfeited three thousand dollars by not accepting the longevity clause in our contract in order to maintain personal privacy and professional effectiveness. And I am strongly opposed to farewell to-dos! Such, in my judgement, are meaningless tribal rituals whose time has passed.

Also, Bob, I am making this letter public, since previous statements to the press around this issue were handled with no grace, no style, and very little respect for accuracy and truth.

she served during the first years of its operation, the Lincoln School, and Mystic School, which she has directed since 1973.

She says she plans to "think, write, and perhaps teach." In her letter to Forest she said also, "I will get to enjoy my two most favorite months, September and June."

Chairman Connie Papas spoke of Grenzeback's "40 years of dedicated service to the town of Winchester."

"She has given us the best of her career and her life. We wish her well and know that she will spend her time well," said Papas, adding, "We cannot help but miss someone who has given her life to the children of Winchester."

The committee engaged in a lengthy debate on the least disruptive means of filling the Ambrose principalship. Among the sugagestions were the possibility of assigning a teaching principal from among the teachers at Ambrose or of moving a teacher from Ambrose to Vinson-

School committee members touched only lightly on Grenzeback's motivation in retiring, satisfying themselves with a brief assurance from Forest that he felt she was truly interested in "getting about the business of living and doing other things."

Owen for the entire school year so that Flynn would be able to complete a full year in one school.

The latter was strongly objected to because of the disruption that would be created among the teaching teams at both schools.

Bauman noted that the process of installing a new superintendent could possibly take up to a full year, in which case it would not be necessary for classes at either school to have two teachers during the year.

The final vote was in favor of authorizing Forest to offer the position to Flynn, with only Catherine Alexander voting in opposition.

"The alternate option of a teaching principal is preferable in terms of students and dollars," said Alexander, adding "There are serious financial implications." She stressed that she considered Flynn "a fine administrator," and that her vote was based solely on financial and educational concerns.

bulance to the hospital while they continued to perform artificial respiration on their patient.

According to the doctor who treated the woman at the Winchester Hospital Emergency Room, the EMTs' quick action prevented brain damage and possibly death.

"I think they did a fantastic job," said Dr. Neal Snebold. "Even though she was in shock when we got her, she was not in cardiac arrest and we were able to resuscitate her.

"To have been able to revive her on the scene vastly improved her odds," continued Snebold. "When someone is in shock like that, and the heart stops beating, the brain dies in four to five minutes."

Reid commented that because time in crucial in such emergency cases, it is important that people know CPR.

"If a lot more people knew CPR, things like this wouldn't happen," he said. "It is quite possible that when we get there, it's too late even after we do resuscitation. The idea of everyone knowing CPR is to have someone there performing it before we get there, so when we arrive we can just take over."

The woman spent a week in the intensive care unit before she was released Monday. She noted that during the week, the EMTs called the hospital frequently to find out how their patient was faring.

"They called up several times asking 'How's she doing?' and 'When is she going to go home,' " said the woman. "The job isn't just a one-stop deal for them. They really follow through, they really care."

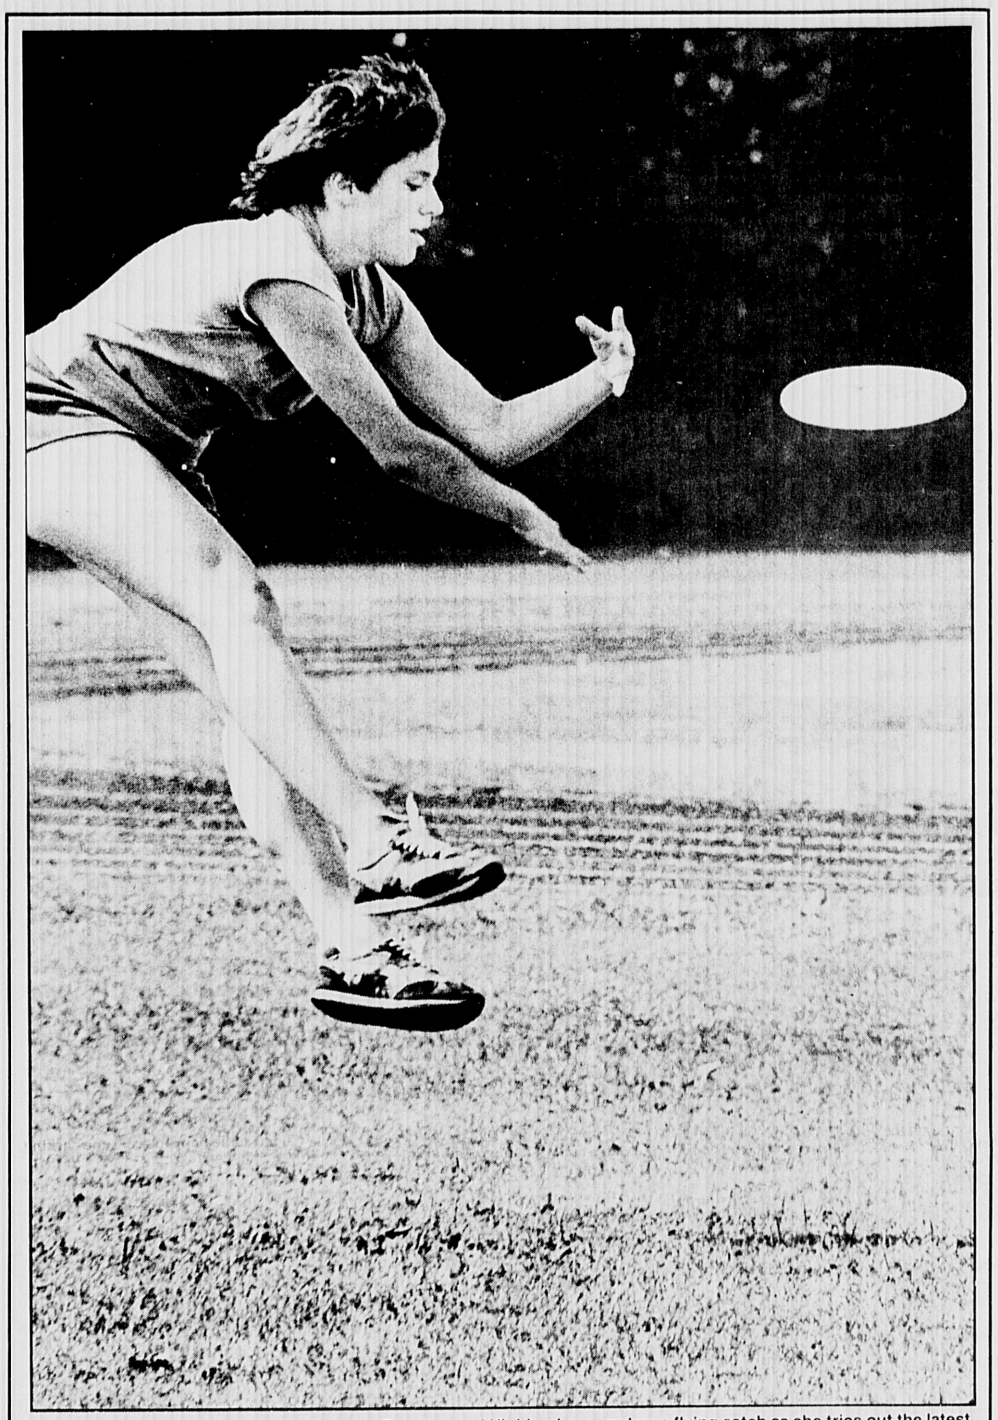
Star Sports



NEW-FOUND SPORT — Star intern Demetra Tseckares of Highland ave. makes a flying catch as she tries out the latest sport to hit town — Ultimate Frisbee. The popular college-campus game has arrived in Winchester thanks to Ross Cunningham and Brian Moore, who have started a weekly Sunday evening game on the Winchester High School field. Ultimate Fun

Pair Brings Fast-Paced Sport – Ultimate Frisbee – To Town

By DEMETRA TSECKARES

I turned suddenly, and seeing my teammate pointing downfield ran in the direction of his finger. Finally able to escape my opponent's constant shadowing, I leapt into the air and felt my fingertips brush the flying disc. But I was unable to snag the Frisbee. I groaned as it landed four feet away from me in the end zone.

I never thought I would spend two hours in the broiling sun chasing back and forth across the high school field after a Frisbee, but last Sunday I was doing just that. And it wasn't a friendly toss-the-Frisbee game either; this was a rigorous game of Ultimate Frisbee.

Obviously I was having a tough time. Remarkably, however, I was also having — fun. The other five players there all laughingly agreed that the most reliable factor of Ultimate Frisbee is "Sweat."

"It's definitely a workout," says Ross Cunningham. The game is a mixture of football, basketball, and soccer. The 40-by-sixty yard field is bordered by two end zones as in football, and the Frisbee must be caught in the end zone to score. Each team defends its own end zone but unlike football a player cannot run with the Frisbee. Instead, the Frisbee must be thrown from player to player,allowing the thrower to only pivot instead of move with it.

The Frisbee goes to the other team if it is intercepted, dropped, or not caught. And with the constant changeovers comes a lot of running.

"The rules are very simple," says Brian Moore. "But there's a certain amount of grace involved in playing."

But what keeps players coming back for more is not just the exercise. Exercise is easy to find in less vigorous forms. Steve Ludlum, who played Ultimate Frisbee for Princeton for one year, and later for Lehigh University for three years, explains that the fast pace is what excites him about the game.

Cunningham explains his love of the game, "The good thing about Frisbee is it's a mellow game. There's a lot of action but not a lot of violence."

Another advantage to Ultimate Frisbee is its low cost. "No equipment is needed — no uniforms, no special pads — just a $6 Frisbee." Even the cost to hire a referee is not needed. The game is called by each of the players. "This is great," says Cunningham. "It avoids arguments if everyone plays right" Moore adds. "It adds sportsmanship to the game."

Thanks to Cunningham and Moore, Ultimate Frisbee has moved from college campuses to Winchester, with games Sunday evenings at 5 on the Winchester High School field. The pair has always had an interest in Frisbee, they say, and according to Moore it was this interest that made them decide to try to start an Ultimate Frisbee team.

Before moving to Winchester, Moore lived in Maine where he started a high school Frisbee team. "I wanted an alternative to the sports they offered so I decided to give it a try," he says. His attempt turned into a tremendous success. "A lot of athletes joined, and we became one of the better teams around."

Cunningham has played for a youth group for several years and often in pick-up games around town.

Drumming up support and interest has been their major problem. "We've put up signs downtown to let people know about the games, but not many people have shown up for them," they say. Moore explains, "I think people are

Husband-Wife Tennis Tourney

Will Families That Play Stay Together?

By CHARLOTTE MERYMAN

They say it's all in fun, but the rest of us know better.

This weekend's husband and wife tennis tournament is a psychologist's delight: a chance to observe 50 married couples in a ruthless battle for the E. Whitney Gray silver bowl.

Imagine the affectionate interaction between teammates: "You idiot! That was a net ball! I told you I was playing back!"

Or "Don't tell me where to play, honey. I learned this game when I was six years old, remember."

There are the low blows: "You never could play tennis as well as my first husband."

There's the manipulative suicidal passive-aggressive: "I'll kill myself if I miss another shot" and the manipulative homicidal active-aggressive: "I'll kill you if you miss another shot."

There's the authoritarian command, the reactionary outrage, and, of course, the complete communication breakdown (also known as "divorce").

Fortunately for the participants, the founders of this Winchester Tennis Assn. event foresaw some of these difficulties. They planned the E. Whitney Gray Husband and Wife Party for Saturday night so the couples have a chance to start speaking to each other again before Sunday's matches.

The party, which will be held this year at the Jenks Senior Center, also serves to blur the minds of the participants so that they recall the tournament fondly and are lured into signing up for it again the next year.

Some players enter the tourney for the challenge of the tennis, some enter to play a good match and enjoy the party afterwards, and then there are some who just skip the match altogether and head straight for the party.

"When it started they decided it would be an enormous tournament with big prizes," said Whit Gray, supervisor of the Packer Courts and the man in whose honor the tourney is held.

"Then they said, 'let's have a party Saturday night' and they de-emphasized the tournament and emphasized the party," said Gray. "The tournament just took care of itself."

The highlight of the party each year — and the event that's even harder to predict than the outcome of the tourney — is the entrance of two uninvited, unmarried, but expected guests.

"We might sneak in there somehow," said Ralph Bates noncommitally when questioned in a telephone interview this week. He and Roberta McNamara have made a brief appearance at each of the last three parties, and came elaborately disguised to the last two. In '81 they popped out of a cardboard wedding cake and last year they appeared dressed as a pregnant bride and a bridegroom and were "married" at St. Eulalia's Church on Ridge st.

"I just like to give them a hard time and they give me a hard time right back," said Bates. Asked if he had considered getting married so that he could play in the tournament and attend the party legally, he said, "Maybe just for a few days."

"This is not a competitive tournament," said Laurie Minnitti, chair of the tourney. "It's for fun, — for dancing, drinking, and dining, to meet other tennis-playing couples, and to have a good time."

In addition to Bates and McNamara, this year's party will officially feature entertainment by a band headed by Leo Lauretano, a local dentist. The band plays mostly rock, said Minnitti, explaining, "This is a young-at-heart crowd."

Minnitti expects 45-50 couples to participate in the match, which will begin Saturday at 8 a.m. at the Packer Courts. Sunday's matches will begin at 10 a.m.

"I don't think anyone's out for blood," said John Steven, a member of the Winchester Tennis Assn. and a frequent participant in the tourney. Nevertheless, everyone seems to know who the top competitors are.

"I'd have to go with Neil and Kathy Hurley," said Gray. "They've won it four years in a row. I'm sure Vandy and Leslie French will be seeded second."

"Myra Fournier and Jeff Spin, also Tom and Kathryn Dunn, have a good chance to be in the finals — possibly against Karen and Ted Martin," speculated Minnitti. "It could be a very tight race."

All-Stars Knocked Out Of NEs In Semifinals

The Winchester 12-year-old All-Star team fell one inning shy of getting into the Babe Ruth New England Championship finals Thursday.

The local team had fought their way up through the losers' bracket this week, and even though they faced a near-impossible task of winning five games in three days for the crown, it looked like they could do it.

They wiped out West Warwick, R.I., and Brookfield, Conn., along the way, and seemed well on their way to defeating Nashua, N.H., for a finals berth when disaster struck.

The All-Stars had taken a 9-0 lead in the Nashua game, lost it, and then regained a two-run edge with a homer in the fifth and another run in the sixth.

But the effort of playing two games in four hours was too much for the local All-Stars. Two homers in the final frame wiped out the Winchester lead and sent the boys home.

The team started out Wednesday night beating West Warwick behind the pitching of Winchester's ace Neil Harrington.

Winchester fell behind Rhode Island 2-0 but came back in the last of the second and tied the score on hits by Harrington and Scott Garvey.

Winchester went ahead in the fifth inning on Tony Pacione's home run and singles by Vandy French, Danny O'Connell, and David Ducharme. Winchester added three more runs in the sixth on Harrington's home run, a couple of walks, and Vandy French's single.

Harrington was both the hitting and the pitching star for Winchester. He had a single and a home run and, along with French's three singles and Ducharme's two singles, led the offense. On the mound, Harrington struck out seven and was only in trouble in the last inning. In that inning, Warwick loaded the bases, then got a base hit to drive in two runs.

The game ended in spectacular fashion when Vandy French and Ricky Mawn combined to throw out the runner trying to advance to third, thus ending Rhode Island's threat. The final score was Winchester 7-4.

On Thursday night, Winchester stayed in the tournament by knocking off Brookfield, Conn. 5-0 behind the two-hit pitching of Jimmy Tuohy.

Winchester jumped off to a 1-0 lead in the first inning on singles by French, Shane, Wyse, and O'Connell. They scored the run on Gino Giangrande's sacrifice fly to right field.

In the fourth inning, Harrington led off with a single, and he scored on Tony Pacione's second homer in two days. Garvey then singled and pitcher Jim Tuohy hit a home run for two more Winchester runs.

Tuohy pitched a good game, facing only 21 batters-three over the minimum of 18. He struck out five and walked one.

Tuohy was helped by two double plays, both started by Scott Garvey, and two excellent defensive plays by Garvey's replacement, Jack O'Callaghan, in the sixth inning.

Immediately after that game, Winchester had to take on Nashua.

The team jumped out to a quick 9-0 lead and could not hang on, losing 13-12.

Nashua started their ace pitcher Jim Hujsak who had beaten Winchester before to give Winchester its only loss. Hujsak didn't seem to have the magic early on, as Winchester scored three runs in the first inning on singles by French, Pacione, a walk to O'Connell and Dave Ducharme's double.

Winchester added six runs in the second and chased starting pitcher Hujsak gaining a 9-0 lead. O'Connell tripled in two runs, Harrington homered, David Romboli, Garvey and Giangrande all had hits to drive in runs in the big six-run inning.

In the bottom of the inning, Nashua started their comeback. Garvey experienced control problems and walked three batters which led to Nashua scoring four runs. The host team rallied for six more runs in the bottom of the third to take a 10-9 lead.

At this point, Nashua put its ace pitcher Hujsak back to the mound. Again, Winchester got to him.

In the Winchester fourth, O'Connell homered to tie the game at 10 apiece. In the fifth, Garvey homered to give

Homers, Stolen Bases Don't Translate Into Softball Wins

The Winchester girls summer softball team is hitting homers, stealing bases, working the hit-and-run, and taking advantage of wild pitches.

Unfortunately, they aren't winning.

It really doesn't make much sense. This week, the team lost all four games although they were playing aggressively enough to win a half-dozen.

In the four games, the girls stole 10 bases, and were paying enough attention to grab seven more bases on wild pitches. They hit four homers, three RBI triples, and one sacrifice fly that scored another run.

If the Sox played with that much spirit, they wouldn't be sitting at the bottom of their division. The Winchester girls do, and they are still 4-10.

Some of the problem is a lack of experience — most of the veteran ballplayers are getting ready for the fall Winchester High season and by-passing the softball contests.

The younger players left on the squad are trying hard to fill the gaps, but some of those gaps are rather large.

Take Monday night's game against Stoneham. Coach Kathy Mangano had to put her fourth-string pitcher, Barbara Delaney, on the mound, and when she tired, had to go for relief to Carey MacDonald, who had never pitched before.

Mangano figures, though, that her players, most of whom play on the Winchester High JV squad, are there to learn. And they are learning how to play heads-up ball.

It's just too bad they also have to learn how to swallow defeat, and some heart-breaking defeats at that. Fans could argue that the team should have won all but one of this week's games.

Take the first game of the week, against Melrose. The girls ignored an eight-run deficit to come within two in a wild, six-run final inning. And when Melrose finally put down the revolt, Winchester had the winning run at the plate.

The big, six-run inning came with two out in the bottom of the seventh.

Mich Powers sparked the team with some hustling base running, gaining first with a walk, stealing second, and then advancing to third on a wild pitch from an obviously rattled pitcher.

The pitcher walked Lauren Hartnett and Jean Benincasa to load the bases, and then Ellen Clavin brought in Powers with a single.

Barbara Delaney's single pushed across another run, and then Bonnie Jean Casey blasted a triple to left field, clearing the bases and bringing the score to 11-8.

After another walk to Powers, Julie Conley punched a single through to score Casey. But both Powers and Conley, the tying run, were left hanging on a long fly ball that didn't go quite long enough.

The second game of the week, against Woburn, was the only one that seemed hopeless for the Winchester squad. "Our problem was we couldn't hit off their pitcher all night," commented Mangano. "We couldn't hit off her at all."

Winchester did manage to put together four runs, with the patented base-stealing and big hits, but couldn't nearly match Woburn's 11.

Winchester couldn't touch the Woburn hurler at all until the fourth, when Linda Koenig walked and scored on a Benincasa triple.

The team used its speed to garner two more runs in the sixth. Julie Conley walked, and moved to second on a wild pitch. Koenig picked up a base on balls, and then the Winchester girls pulled off a double steal to put both runners in scoring position. They scored from the position, too, as Benincasa got her second and third RBIs of the day with a single.

The final Winchester run came in the final inning, again with a little smart baserunning. Kelly Lent got to first on a walk, to second on a wild pitch, to third on

Rec Dept. Campers Learn Life Sports

Lifetime Sports was the theme of last week's Mini Camp sponsored by the Winchester Recreation Dept. By the end of the week, the 39 campers were saturated with sports.

The week began with the participants learning the basics of lacrosse. Once the campers had mastered the basics of how to hold the stick, they then played lacrosse games. The rest of the week consisted of softball games, street hockey and neft football.

For a break from all the physical activities and to cool the mini campers, a quick trip to Leonard Beach was called for where a good time was had by all.

Wednesday consisted of a Jazzercise demonstration by Lorraine Screnci of Woburn. Mini campers "boogied" to Michael Jackson's "Beat It." The afternoon held a mock track meet at Manchester Field.

The latter part of the week were such great sports as tennis lessons, basketball games and a martial arts demonstration by Master Suk Chung of Cambridge. This was one activity that captured everyone's attention.

The week ended with a trip to Wallex Recreation Center in Waltham. Here, campers went rollerskating, bowling and miniature golfing.

Residents Join Royall House Association

Two Winchester residents were welcomed into the Royall House Assn. of Medford. Robert Surabian and Leo Boodakian, prominent businessmen of Winchester, have added another civic commitment to their schedule of promoting community activities.

The Royall House Assn. is dedicated to the preservation of the historic Royall House in Medford. This house stands on the very spot where settlers of New England battled for freedom in the new country.

This mansion of a wealthy Tory was confiscated by the American Army for the headquarters of Washington's Generals Lee, Stark and Sullivan planned and directed the Battle of Bunker Hill, the first and most severe engagement of the revolution.

Today, the Royall House is open to the public as a museum of 18th Century lifestyle of a wealthy settler. It is authentically furnished in 18th Century furniture and accessories, the gift of Frederick Bridge of Winchester. The Royall House is open to the public daily except Monday and Friday from May 1 to October 1.

Attending the recent open house sponsored by the Royall House Assn. were Mr. and Mrs. Fischer of Wildwood rd. and the Robert Gardners of Winchester.

a Alyssa Parker single, and scored on a wild pitch.

For the next two games, Mangano had only nine players to field in a game that usually takes 10 to play. The Winchester girls scored seven in each, but unfortunately their opponents scored more.

Against North Reading, the top team in the league, the girls managed to jump out to a 4-1 lead by the third, scoring all four in that inning.

Jean Benincasa started it out with a single, move to second on a wild pitch, and scored on a Patti Taylor triple. Taylor, in turn, was brought home by a two-run homer from Koenig.

Debbie Taylor got a walk to put Winchester runners back on the basepaths, moved to second on a walk to Benincasa, took third on a wild pitch, and scored the fourth run of the inning on a sacrifice fly from Julie Conley.

The Winchester lead didn't last long — North Reading scored five in the bottom of the inning to take a 6-4 lead.

Winchester tied it up in the fourth, though, gaining ground on a two-run homer from Barbara Delaney.

But North Reading put it out of reach in the next two innings, scoring six to make it 12-6.

The Winchester team made it one run closer in the sixth with a Julie Conley homer, but North Reading matched it with one of their own for a final score of 13-7.

In the final game of the week on Monday, the Winchester girls kept coming close to beating Stoneham, but never quite made it.

Stoneham jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first, but Winchester closed to within one after a three-run second inning.

The three came after Barbara Delaney reached first on a single, stole second, moved to third on a Kelly Lent single, and scored on a Carey MacDonald single. Debbie Taylor then moved the other two runs across the plate with a single.

The two teams traded runs in the third, with Winchester scoring on a solo homer from Delaney.

Winchester managed to tie the game 5-5 in the fourth, getting a run on a MacDonald single, two stolen bases and an RBI single from Ellen Clavin.

After Stoneham went ahead again in the bottom of the fourth, the Winchester squad tied it again in the sixth with another batch of steals from MacDonald.

MacDonald reached on a single, stole second and third, and then scored on a wild pitch to tie the game at six apiece.

But Stoneham continued to be one step ahead of the Winchester team. They scored three in the bottom of the sixth to make it 9-6, and all Linda Koenig's RBI single in the top of the seventh accomplished was to make the game that much closer. The single scored Clavin, who had stolen two bases to get in scoring position.

What was that they said — it's all in fun?

"The tennis players, when they get on a court, are very competitive so when it comes down to play — they're serious," said Gray.

"Lots of husbands and wives play together consistently but not competitively; competition brings out the aggressive tendencies," explained Binnie Backer, a Winchester therapist and an affiliate of the Counseling and Resource Center on Spruce st.

"It does take a very special type of interaction," she explained. "I'm sure that if a couple has learned how to work as a team they do better than those couples who have not learned how to do that."

She suggested especially that trouble could arise if one member of the team takes on the role of captain and the other the role of mate without an agreement between the two on which player should be in which role (Don't tell me where to play, honey!").

"People can compete in a very healthy way," said Pearl Janszen, a psychologist with the Community Counseling Collaborative in Reading. "The first thing I'd look at is are they having fun."

That's probably the first thing the competitors are looking at, too. Judging by the number of entrants, someone must be enjoying it.

Asked if he thought the tourney was here to stay, Gray said, "I hope so — we've got a permanent cup in my name."

Winchester the lead 11-10.

Winchester upped the lead to 12-10 in the sixth. O'Connell singled, two passed balls, and scored on a single by Gino Giangrande. The lead looked pretty safe with ace Harrington coming in. But in the bottom of the sixth with one out, pitcher Jim Hujsak singled and scored on Chris Holki's home run to tie the game. On the very next pitch to catcher John Hujsak, he hit it out of the park to win the game for Nashua.

It was a heartbreaking loss for the Winchester team, and they should be congratulated for the outstanding job both on and off the field for the week of the tournament.

Players from Winchester making the trip were: Tony Pacione, Mark Russo, Neil Harrington, Shane Wyse, David Ducharme, David Romboli, J.J. Alberts, Vandy French, David Snyder, Scott Garvey, Jim Tuohy, Ricky Mawn, Jack O'Callaghan, Danny O'Connell, Gino Giangrande. timid to join because they have no experience. They don't realize it doesn't take much time or skill to learn."

After all, I learned to play Ultimate Frisbee and my Frisbee experience consisted of lazy tosses at the beach, not the high powered game I encountered on Sunday. I even whipped the Frisbee to my teammate for a touchdown at the end of the game. And that's the funniest part.

really know why," he said. "But I will work at something if I have to."

One of the things Fuchs has to work hard at is his job at the Service Merchandise Warehouse in Burlington, which he began in high school, and hopes to continue through-out college to help his parents pay for expenses. John does just about whatever needs to be done there, including working the "graveyard shift" - from midnight till 9 a.m.

Fuchs keen mind for business also keeps him occupied. He has his own computer and word processor, keeps a small amount of money in several banks to compare interest rates, and watches the stock market closely.

"I think the stock market is really interesting because it involves taking risks," he said. "And I believe in taking risks."

Fuchs believes that he can take a lot of risks in the business world, he plans to study business at Boston College for his next three years there, and was somewhat disgusted with liberal arts. "I took history, English, philosophy and all that stuff this year," he said. "I felt like I wasn't learning anything. I've known since tenth grade that I want to go into business."

It's easy for John to see himself in business, especially in financial investment analysis. "I really didn't work that hard at academics this year," he said, recalling that he spent his first semester at Boston College wandering around looking for buildings. "Although I'd like to have a career in business, if I get a break in my singing career, who knows.?"

As far as his tennis career is concerned, Fuchs said he may walk away from it, or may go back and try to really develop his talent. "Tennis has always been an on-and-off proposition in my life," he says. "I'm trying to get back in shape for it now, but I'm not sure how far I'll go with it."

Fuchs is certain that he will continue to do his best at whatever facet of his many talents he chooses to develop. He could end up singing in clubs and concerts, watching the stock market on Wall Street or racking up tennis titles with a grin on his face and a song in his heart.

me."

So rather than rely on hearsay, the School Committee decided they wanted Tseckares there.

After a 10-minute recess and a telephone call, Tseckares appeared, full of enthusiasm for the church's plans.

"They seemed like a highly professional organization that would put the school building to good use and mitigate any impact on the neighborhood," said Tseckares.

Tseckares explained that all three members of his committee, along with five out of the seven members of the neighborhood committee, had met with church officials and reviewed their proposal.

"We had a very interesting, hour-long discussion," said Tseckares. "Afterwards, we unanimously agreed — we being both our committee and the neighborhood committee — to make a specific recommendation to you. That recommendation was to attempt to negotiate a contract."

Tseckares pointed out that having the church in the building would create less parking problems than almost any other use.

The alternative to the church, putting several smaller groups in the building including Children's Own School and the Apple School of Belmont, would mean each organization would require parking during the week, Tseckares explained.

The single church school, he said, would require very little parking during the weekdays. Only on Sundays, during church services, would there be a large number of cars at the building, he continued.

"They understand, and the neighborhood understands, that Sunday would be a problem," said Tseckares. "But the church will try to mitigate the problem."

Tseckares explained that 30-40 cars could be parked inside the school fence, on the paved and gravel-packed playgrounds. He added that since everyone going to the services would arrive and leave at the same time, the cars could be parked closely together by a valet.

Weylman objected that Marshall rd., the entrance to the playground, would become congested by the traffic from 200 parishioners.

Tseckares pointed out that only the 30 to 40 cars would be using Marshall rd., with the rest parking on the street. And Bauman added that, "It will look like Church st. on Sunday. But just as the neighbors of the Epiphany Church go to the church or the town's Traffic Advisory Committee with problems, so the Mystic neighbors can take that route."

The church group would be more than willing to work out any future problems with the neighbors, both Tseckares and Bauman said.

"We discussed this that evening, and the possibility of having the neighborhood committee continue was brought up," Tseckares said. "If problems do arise, the people on the committee will know the exact people to go to in the church group."

Bauman added, "There is a sensitivity on the part of the church group to the neighborhood situation. The pastor and one of the parishioners gave us their phone numbers and asked people to call them if they had any questions."

School Committee member Catherine Alexander was more concerned with finances than with parking, questioning Tseckares at length on the church's ability to pay the rent and upkeep for the school.

Tseckares said he didn't investigate the group's finances, other than to contact its former landlord, the Armenian Church of Belmont, to see if they were good tenants. They were, he said.

Tseckares also said the size of the congregation, despite the fact the church is only two years old, made him feel confident the church could afford the Mystic School.

"Being a new church, there is a certain act of faith involved on our part," said Tseckares. "But they are already 200 to 250 strong. I know of a similar group in Lexington, and they have a very strong tithing system. So you have the resources of the communicants, and the tuition payments."

Bauman added that with 200 people in the church, the cost of maintenance and rent would come to less than $200 per person.

Church officials also seemed very interested in keeping up the building, noted Tseckares, as they volunteered to paint the trim on the outside of the building and fix the gutters. Such care didn't happen with the last school tenant, when the private Bartlett School was in the closed Wyman School, he said.

"This group feels it is in their best interests to put their best foot forward in the community," said Tseckares. "That gives me real confidence in the group."

Tseckares' confidence was infectious. Despite their reservations about hurrying a vote, the School Committee decided that they would become landlords to the Faith Fellowship Ministries of New England.

to put the issue before Town Meeting.

Neighborhood residents weren't the only ones who signed the petition, which calls for the $87,000 appropriation to be rescinded and applied instead to "town employee raises or other necessary uses." Signatures were collected from all over town, from Canterbury rd. to Sheridan circ.

"We decided to go out to the town in general to demonstrate that other people in the town are against spending money for a road no one wants," said Peritz of 34 Pilgrim dr., vice president of CROW.

But Town Meeting may come too late to prevent the link, Peritz said. "There is a matter of practicality — if the road is completed, there is not much Town Meeting can do," he said. "It may end up being a moot point."

Whether it will be a moot point or not depends how quickly the Special Town Meeting is called to discuss the rejected police and custodian contracts. The neighbors have requested the article be placed on the next Town Meeting warrant.

Town officials are leaning toward late September for the Special Town Meeting, and according to DPW director Dom Serratore, construction should be completed in mid-October.

Public Works crews began cutting down trees a week-and-a-half ago, said Serratore, and began excavating last Monday. Excavation is 90 percent completed, and the next step is to decide how much blasting must be done.

Once the town engineer settles on the final construction plans next week, said Serratore, the project will go out for bid. Serratore said his "intention" is to have the work done by an outside contractor, but final plans aren't set yet.

Although CROW argued in its court brief that the project would probably cost $250,000 rather than the $87,000 appropriated, Serratore said, "I'm quite sure we'll make the $87,000 appropriation."

The advent of construction has left the neighbors resigned, if not happy, about the link.

"I'm not going to make myself sick over this, it's made enough people sick already," said Gediman. "You really can't beat the town when it wants to do something. The town's got all the power, all the advantages. It's heartbreaking."

Peritz commented that the heartbreak could have been avoided if the town had compromised with the neighbors.

"A lot of things could have been done without changing the whole composure of the neighborhood," said Peritz.

"The basis for cutting the road through was to provide emergency service, and to put a water main in to improve the water pressure," he explained. "They could have put in the main without building the road, and they could have cut the trees, put in a gravel road, and blocked it off for emergency service only.

"As far as the logic of the issue that someone would sue the town if emergency service couldn't come in, it doesn't make sense," he continued. "When they're blasting 20 to 30 feet from people's homes, they are almost certain to have a lawsuit because of damages. And the likelihood of the town being sued because a child is injured by the increased traffic is far greater than that they will be sued for a lack of emergency service.

"The road is constructed right at the crest of a hill, and people are going to come up over that hill without being able to see, going too fast — that's a dangerous situation," Peritz added. "But the town has decided that this is the thing to do, and it is not going to be overruled."

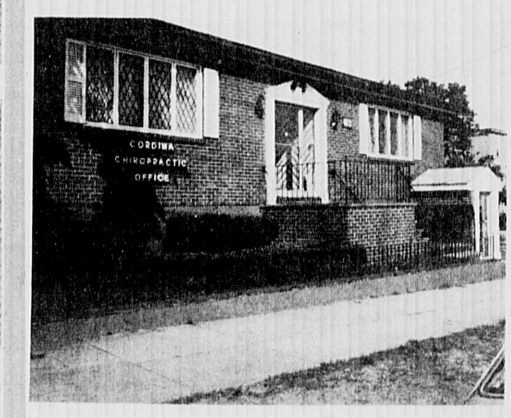
With 20 Years Experience Cordima Chiropractic Is More Than Qualified To Help You



Although most of us think of chiropractors in relation to back pain, Dr. Thomas Cordima, director of Cordima Chiropractic Services Inc., 63 Mass. Ave., in Arlington, explains that his services can "alleviate much more than just back pain."

Dr. Cordima and his fellow doctors of Chiropractic, Peter J. Kevrian and Francine Chodorav, can not only alleviate back pain, but their professional skills can also offer relief from headaches, neck pain, arm and leg discomfort, bursitis, asthma, high and low blood pressure, ulcers, and tingling or numbness.

With more than 20 years of experience as a doctor of Chiropractic, Dr. Cordima is more than qualified to explain how a chiropractor treats a patient. "We correct misalignments of spinal vertebrae restoring the integrity of the nervous system throughout the body releasing interferences of nerve force flow," Cordima offers. "We manually adjust the vertebrae in the spinal column and in the pelvis and supplement this treatment with several adjunctive therapies such as ultrasound which breaks up congestion with high-frequency sound waves, traction, and diatherm which increases blood flow by penetrating tissue with short sound waves."

More than 10,584 visits were made to Cordima Chiropractic Services last year alone and Dr. Cordima has treated more than 60,000 patients throughout his career. Dr. Cordima is also a certified acupuncturist and offers acupuncture treatment at the Arlington office.

The facilities at 63 Mass. ave. include a 21-room office staffed by three chiropractors and eight support staff members. They handle personal injury, workman's comp., private insurance and auto accident claims. Your visit and treatment is also covered by Blue Cross & Blue Shield if your coverage includes a chiropractor rider.

To facilitate travel to and from the health care facility, free transportation is available in a 12-passenger, air-conditioned bus that will pick up and return passengers to their home or office.

"Most of the people we treat come here due to word of mouth," explains Dr. Cordima. "However, many are also referred to us by their physicians."

Dr. Cordima and the staff at Chiropractic Services do a lot more than alleviate back pain. To find out what they can do for such other problems as headaches, neck pain, ulcers, high and low blood pressure, tingling or numbness, asthma, or other ailments, take advantage of their offer for a complimentary spinal screening.

Cordima Chiropractic Services is open seven days a week 8-12 and 2-6.

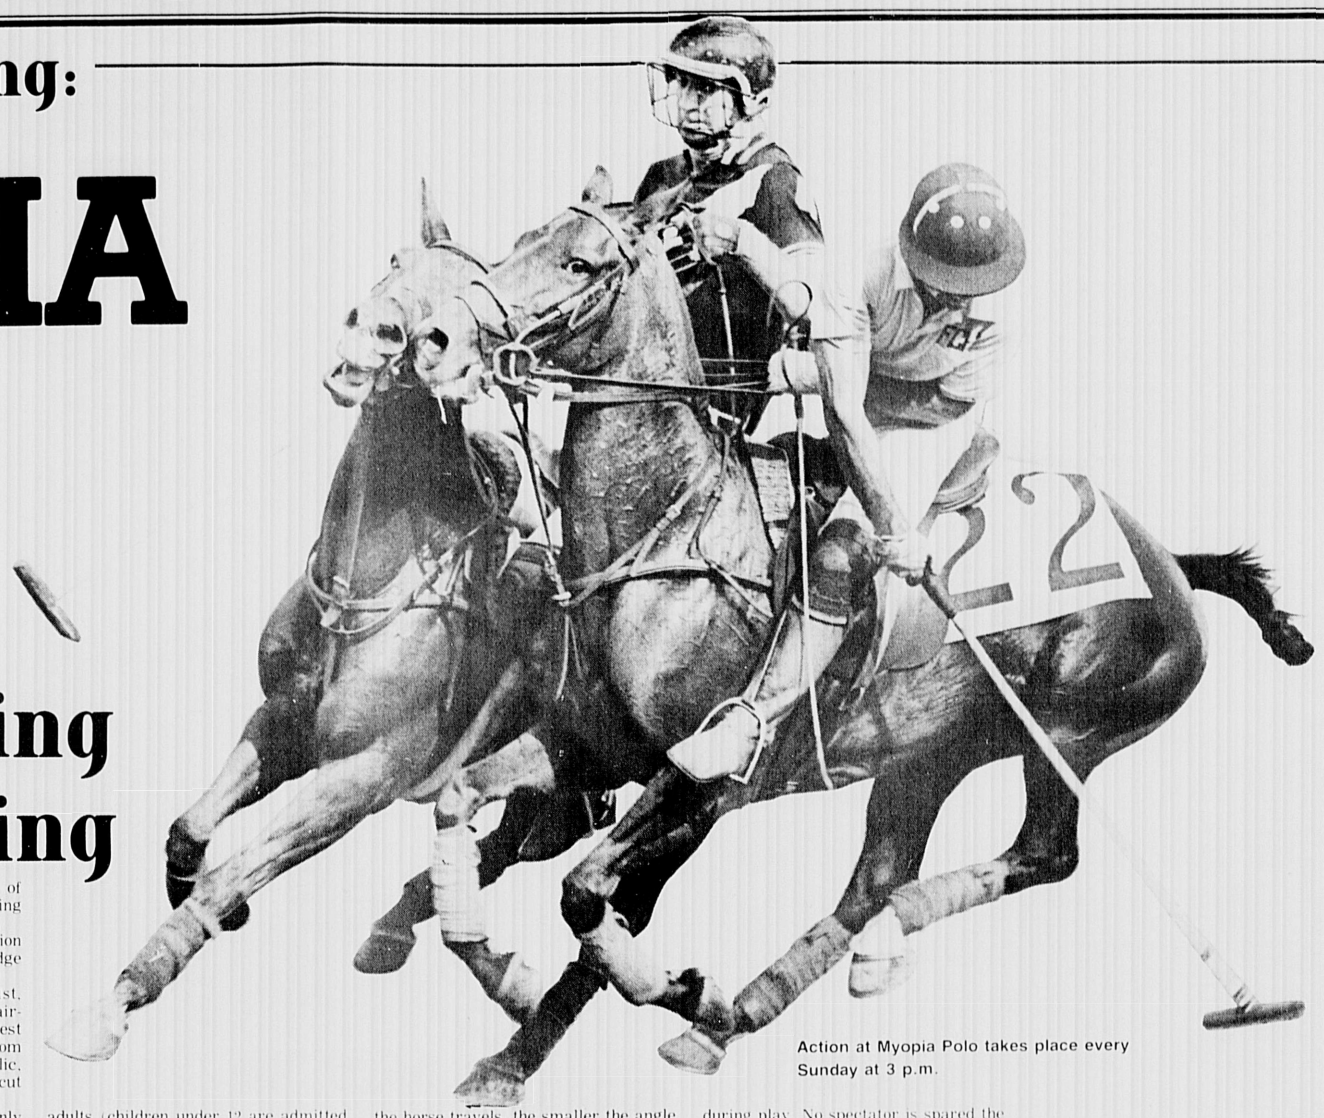
Where Horse Is King:

MYOPIA POLO

A Fast-Paced Game Combining Skill And Daring



Action at Myopia Polo takes place every Sunday at 3 p.m.

Don't let all the Mercedes, the tall champagne glasses and the silver dinnerware scare you away. Sunday afternoons at Myopia Polo are for everyone.

In its 95th season of polo, the Myopia Hunt Club in Hamilton on the North Shore hosts games at 3 p.m. every Sunday through Oct. 9 and some of the most prestigious polo tournaments in the country featuring world class players.

The name "polo" is derived from the ancient Tibetan word "pulu" meaning ball. Polo, the oldest organized team sport and one of the toughest games to master, is the ultimate challenge for a horseman with a passion for riding skill and excitement.

Polo is fast and fierce and offers something for everyone.

For the fan, it is a high risk, fast-paced game filled with the contact of hockey, the strategy of chess, the dexterity of baseball and the daring of skydiving.

For the player, it is the thrill of competition, the comaraderie with teammates, and the satisfaction of melding player and pony into one being intent on only one objective, the game.

It is a game to be savoured; the action and excitement will keep you on the edge of your seat.

From August 14 through the 21st, Myopia will host the National Chairman's Cup, one of the country's biggest tournaments with players coming from Argentina, the Dominican Republic, Canada, Texas, New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

The Chairman's Cup, the only national tournament of its caliber on the east coast this summer, has been awarded to Myopia for a record fourth year.

Last year's winner, Windswept Farm (formerly Fairfield) will be back to defend its title against seven other top teams.

The public is invited to come out and watch the opening round of the tournament on Sunday, August 14 and the finals on Sunday, August 21. Both games start at 3 p.m. and admission is $5 for adults (children under 12 are admitted free of charge).

Aside from the tournament, polo games are held every Sunday at 3 p.m. through Oct. 9.

To better prepare you for the games, the following is a list of polo terms that give you a good idea of what polo is all about and what the lingo you'll be hearing means:

Bump: A player is permitted to ride into another player so as to spoil his shot. The angle of collision must be slight, causing no more than a jar. The faster the horse travels, the smaller the angle must be. A good bump can shake your dentures loose.

Chukkers: The game is divided into six periods, or chukkers, of 7½ minutes of actual playing time. After each period, time is allowed for changing horses and, during half-time, a 15-minute intermission is scheduled to permit repairs to the playing field.

Divots: During intermission at a polo match, patrons of the sport are invited out on the field to replace clumps of earth (divots) that have been kicked up during play. No spectator is spared the honor. Even the Queen of England participates in stepping on divots.

Field: Nine times the size of a football field, the field is 300 yards long and 160 yards wide outlined by sideboards. The condition of the field must be dry yet springy and without holes or pockets. The field is constantly maintained like the putting green of a golf course. There are only eight players on this huge field at one time making it, for spectators, easy to follow.

Goal: Any time a ball crosses the line between the goal posts, it is considered a goal regardless of whether a horse or a mallet cause the ball to go through. In order to equalize wind and turf conditions, the teams change sides after every goal scored. Goal posts are made of paper-mache or some other material light enough to break upon collision.

Hook: A player may spoil another's

Where Horse Racing Is Still Done In Style

A pair of trotters near the finish at Saratoga Harness Track

By DAVE LEECO

At Saratoga, the sport of kings is still conducted in an atmosphere befitting royalty.

During the annual 24-day racing season, which this year runs until Aug. 22, life in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., revolves around the races — breakfasts are taken trackside, mornings are spent touring the National Museum of Racing, afternoons are spent watching the finest thoroughbreds in the country, and in the evening, racing goes on at the Saratoga Harness track.

It's not the racing itself that sets Saratoga apart — you can see fine thoroughbreds run at Suffolk Downs practically year-round. But while the two tracks are only a 3½-hour drive apart, they are separated by 100 years.

In Saratoga, racing is done with style, the type of style that drew Diamond Jim Brady, the Vanderbilts and the Whitneys to the upstate New York resort at the turn of the century and continues to draw the world's elite today.

The track itself, on its present site since 1864, exudes elegance. The grandstand is a rambling, whitewashed, Victorian pile adorned with cupolas, pillars and flowerboxes. It is set in a large park, dotted with stately old elms around which the thoroughbreds are led for their warmups.

In the clubhouse, men are requested to wear jackets and ties, women skirts, dresses or slacks. A late luncheon of vichyssoise, cold poached salmon served with a dill sauce, cucumber salad and hard-boiled eggs, and New York cheesecake for dessert can be consumed at white-linen-covered tables set near the track.

After the last race, horse enthusiasts can relax with a hot bath and massage at Saratoga's famous hot springs, before going off to an evening of classical music or ballet at the Performing Arts Center or more racing at the Saratoga Harness Track.

And at night, the action continues at Saratoga's clubs.

Such an elegant life does not come cheaply or easily — the city's hotels, motels and guest houses double their rates during the racing season, and most of the finest hotels are booked well in advance. Motel rates run from $40 to $80 a night, and at the prestigious Gideon Putnam Hotel, located in the middle of the Saratoga Spa State Park, the racing season rates are available only upon request.

(For a list of open rooms, visitors can call the City of Saratoga information booth, (518) 584-4471, which keeps an up-to-the-day list of room vacancies in all the city's hotels.)

Once settled in Saratoga, daily life for the visitor begins as early as it does for the trainers, grooms, jockeys and horses.

And since it is Saratoga, the day begins at trackside, with a "Saratoga Sunrise" breakfast served every morning from 7 to 9:30, a tradition which dates back to the turn of the century when the mark of social position was to be invited for a morning meal at the race track.

As the apprentice jockeys work the horses, patrons sip coffee, nibble on muffins or partake of bacon and eggs while

Horses Aren't The Only Show In Town

Before racing came to Saratoga Springs, tourists did.

The upstate New York city has been a resort since the 1830, when bathing away illnesses in Saratoga's hot springs became popular.

With the arrival of the railroad in 1832, the wealthy began arriving in droves, a season's clothing packed in the famous Saratoga trunk, for a summer of hotel balls, concerts in the parks, rides around the lake, and, of course, baths and massages at the springs.

And although since 1864 Saratoga has become synonymous with thoroughbred racing, it still offers the concerts and baths that drew Southern belles and New York City swells to the city 120 years ago.

At the Saratoga Spa, a 2,000-acre park south of the city, visitors can still get a "90-minute relaxer," 30 minutes of luxuriating in a tubful of warm, naturally carbonated water, followed by 30 minutes of head-to-toe massage and a half hour lying between hot sheets. The spa also features an 18-hole championship golf course, a par 29 nine-hole course, two pools, tennis courts and picnic areas.

At night, there are concerts in the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, a

CIVIL WAR Unit looking for members: The 5th Massachusetts Battery is made up of people in the Greater Boston area interested in the Civil War. There are two divisions: (1) competition shooting divisions which is a North-South Skirmish Association unit that competes in team matches with a full-sized muzzleloading cannon as well as with muskets, carbines and revolvers of the pre-1865 era. And (2) the "chowder and marching division" which takes part in parades, battle re-enactments, and authentic living history demonstrations. You can join either or both depending on your interests. The musket and carbine shooting events involve team shooting at breakable targets with the shortest elapsed time determining the winning team. It's fun if you're interested in black powder shooting. ON PREVENTING HOME FIRES

Every year, home fires take thousands of lives. Ironically, most fires are personal tragedies that could have been prevented. Here are some guidelines from fire experts.

When purchasing space heaters, be sure it has the U.L. seal (Underwriter Laboratory, Inc.). This label assures you that it has been tested and safe. Keep combustibles clear of space heaters. Don't allow dust to collect beneath space heaters as flash fires could result.

Have your furnace checked by a professional every year before cold weather hits. If your furnace hasn't been checked yet, do it now.

Protect your home by installing smoke detectors. Set up some emergency procedures for quick evacuation in case of fire and be sure that each bedroom has at least two means of escape.

Finally, use good common sense in your housekeeping. Don't overload your outlets. Check and replace defective cords and wiring. Store flamable liquids in tight capped metal cans in a cool place. Be sure all matches, cigarettes and cigar butts are completely extinguished before disposing of them in the trash.

Money Needed For Red Cross Disaster Fund

Hubert LeFever, Chairman of the Winchester Chapter, American Red Cross, announced today the successful completion of this Chapter's National Disaster Campaign.

"Our goal was $1,314," he said, "and we've just gone over the 200% mark. All of these funds have been sent to the National Red Cross to enable it to continue its direct relief role in both minor and major disasters.

"We are far from the Eastern Massachusetts goal of $190,000 though and further from the national goal of $33 million," added LeFever. "While the spring and summer floods are over in many states, the clean up work from them and the earlier coastal flooding that occured in California still goes on. And preperations for the fall hurricane season are already underway.

"Though our campaign is officially over, I urge all those who received a note from us to make a gift," he said. "Your contribution goes for direct relief, not administrative overhead. It is a gift that works directly to help people help themselves after a disaster. My personal thanks to all those people, Red Cross members or not, who have already made a gift."

Publications Available In Markey's Office

Free federal government publications dealing with retirement and pension plans are available in Cong. Edward J. Markey's storefront congressional office in Medford. Members of Markey's staff will be on hand Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., in Medford to distribute the booklets at 464B Salem st., across from Johnnie's Foodmaster.

Each of the publications being offered by Markey was prepared by the U.S. Department of Labor.

"Know Your Pension Plan" is designed to help retirees and those nearing retirement determine what their pension plan provides and requires.

A second booklet, "How to File a Claim for Your Benefit," outlines the steps necessary to file a claim and explains what action to take if you are denied pension benefits.

The last publication, "What You Should Know About Pension and Welfare Laws," provides insights into the rights, safeguards, and opportunities offered by the Employment Retirement Income Security Act.

Markey said the pension publications offer is a continuation of the outreach efforts he began earlier this summer. "In recent months, I have sponsored 'special issue' programs in my mobile office on topics such as veterans affairs and U.S. Service Academy appointments. I'm now hoping to reach another group of Seventh District residents — retirees and older workers. I believe the information we're making available will be quite helpful."

★Racing

Mary Ryan, a former assistant to trainer Johnny Campo, gives a rundown on each horse, its breeding line, and the quality of its workout.

One can get breakfast at small tables lining the rail of the clubhouse porch, choosing from an a la carte menu of eggs, cereal, pancakes, French toast.

The buffet breakfast, served upstairs, is a better deal, however, with a choice of everything served on the menu, plus a chance to sit in the box seats reserved for owners and patrons of the turf long before the season begins.

Prices on the a la carte menu range from $3.25 to $5.95, while a buffet ticket runs for $8.95.

Hunger satisfied and appetite whetted for racing, the devotee of the sport may wander across the street from the track after breakfast to the National Museum of Thoroughbred Racing, five rooms packed with race trophies, jockeys' silks and paintings of every horse to win fame on the turf.

There are horses captured in bronze — Secretariat, for example, forelegs stretched out in front as he wins the Belmont Stakes by 33 lengths. There are hundreds of horses done in oils — the granddaddies like Lexington, the most potent stallion in racing history who headed the list of winning sires for 11 seasons in the 1850s and produced 236 winners; or the local favorites like Native Dancer.

One room is devoted to the stern-faced patrons of the racetrack, beginning with George Washington, "a magnificent horseman and enthusiastic patron of the turf" who attended races, wagered on them and is known to have raced one horse, Magnolia, whom he sold to Col. Henry Lee for 5,000 acres of Kentucky land.

For a museum devoted to a fast-paced sport, however, the National Racing Museum is static — there are no films of great races, the famous horses stare immobile from the walls rather than gallop at top speed. But at the price of admission, free, it's worth the trip.

Seeped in the folklore of racing, the visitor heads back across the street to the track, to prepare for the afternoon.

Checking his watch (which naturally includes a stopwatch for timing the races), the turf enthusiast heads back across the street to prepare for the day's wagering.

In the paddock area, more of a park really with its own Saratoga spring, Harvey Pack conducts a seminar on handicapping, explaining how bettors can decipher the Racing Form to pick sure winners (until, of course, the race is actually run).

Soon, the paddock area is buzzing with visitors, vendors are hawking ice cream and beer, and a jazz band tunes up on one side of the paddock while a Bluegrass band strums and plucks on the other.

It's post time.

The races begin at 1:30 p.m. every day except Tuesday, with admission to the grandstand set at $2. To gain entry into the more refined clubhouse crowd, it's an extra $3.

On weekends, the racetrack patron can walk out onto the infield with its elms, duck pond, gazebo and picnic tables. On the six-furlong races, you can get an unobstructed view of the 10-odd horses bursting out of the starting gate.

From the clubhouse, the horse fan can watch the world's best horses — Sunny's Halo, winner of the Kentucky Derby, was at Saratoga last week for the Whitney Stakes — as they walk out to the track from the Paddock.

After the races, the bettor can celebrate good fortune or ease the frustration of losing a bundle at the Saratoga Spa with a soak in the spa's famous mineral waters, followed by a 30-minute massage.

The spa is south of the racetrack on Route 50, and a soak and massage runs for $14. Call in advance for reservations at 584-2011.

Here, the true horse fan and advocate of fine living is faced with a dilemma — head just across the spa for an evening of symphonic sounds from the Philadelphia Orchestra, or drive a short distance to Nelson st. for the harness races?

The orchestra performs at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, a combination of a concert hall and outdoor amphitheater. About 500 seats are available inside the circular center, which opens onto a sloping lawn which can seat another 5,000.

The Saratoga Harness track dispells every bad myth connected with harness racing — the track clubhouse is clean, well-lit, has the same whitewashed charm and beautiful flower boxes as the flat track, and is a very comfortable place to spend a hot August evening.

After either the orchestra or the trotters, it's time to sample Saratoga's nightlife. The clubs off Broadway on Caroline st. feature jazz outdoors, disco dancing inside, and 50-cent beer at Desperate Annie's.

But even at the clubs, the races dominate. Parimutuel tickets litter the tables, and the action stops when the next day's racing report comes on the 11 o'clock news.

After all, when the sun comes up, it's back to another day of breakfasts, betting and baronial splendor at Saratoga.

International Rider Competition Aug. 23

The elegance of the dressage horse, the stamina required of the three-day event horse, and the high jump of the show jumper will all be tested at the championship level at Flying Horse Farm, Aug. 23-28.

Approximately 135 competitors ranging in age from 16 to 21 will come to Wenham from nine countries to compete in the 1983 American Continental Young Riders' Championship at the Hamilton Farm.

For the first time in any Young Riders' competition, three separate championships will take place at the same location. Individual and team medals will be awarded in the dressage, three-day and jumping competitions.

These young riders from the Bahamas, Bermuda, Canada, Ecuador, Jamaica, Puerto Rico, Mexico, the United States and Venezuela have worked for years to earn a chance to represent their country in these competitions. Many go on to compete at the Olympic level later in life.

Another first for the world of American equestrian sports will be the attraction of the Continental Market. Open on the grounds of the Young Riders championships all week, the market will consist of 26 retail shops and boutiques that will be selling equestrian equipment silk scarfs, ties, leather goods and other gifts. The Hungry Fox of Hamilton, a gourmet restaurant, will offer sit down meals, fast food or a packed picnic lunch with cheeses, breads and wine.

Ticket Information:

Tickets for the entire 6 days of competition are now available for $15 at Filene's department stores.

Patron Tickets are available through Flying Horse — Horse Trials, Highland st., South Hamilton, Ma. 01982. The cost is $100 per person ($85 tax deductible) or $150 per couple ($120 tax deductible).

Daily Tickets on sale at the gate only are priced as follows: Tuesday — $2; Wednesday-Thursday — $3; Friday — $4; Saturday — $5; and Sunday — $6. A savings of $8 is realized if weekly tickets are purchased in advance at Filene's. Children under 10 are half price at the gate only.

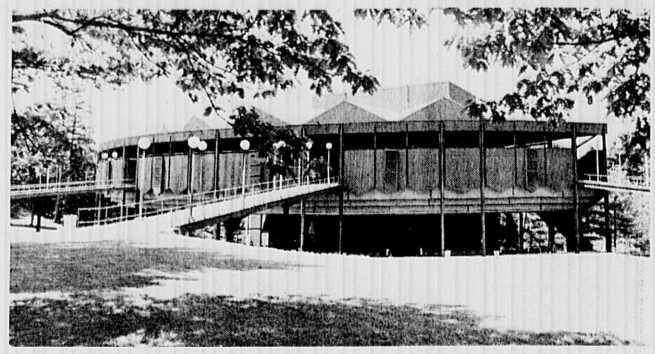
modern version of a Greek amphitheater which seats 500 indoors and 5,000 on the surrounding lawn and hosts the New York City Ballet in July, the Philadelphia Orchestra in August, and acts ranging from Diana Ross to Chuck Mangione in between. Next door, in the classically Greek-styled Little Theatre, modern dance and repertory theater go on from June to September.

Just by walking down the streets, modern visitors can soak up the flavor of the city at its Gay 90s heyday, when racing, gambling and the mineral waters brought everyone from President Benjamin Harrison to the King of India to Saratoga. Along Union ave. and North Broadway, immense houses attest to the wealth of Saratoga's summer set and show off architectural styles from the pillars of Greek Revival to the gingerbread of Victorian Gothic Revival to the mansard roofs of the French Empire style.

Today's Saratoga also features something the 1800s patrons couldn't see — scores of museums, some devoted to recapturing Saratoga's flair at the turn of the century, others specializing in everything from Revolutionary War history to antique bottles.

A good place to start is The Casino, located in the middle of Saratoga Springs in Congress Park and the headquarters of the Historical Society of Saratoga Springs.



The Saratoga Performing Arts Center.

The lavish Casino gave the 1800s wealthy high-stakes poker, roulette and faro ("known to all experts as swindles" according to a newspaper article of the time) in an ornate Victorian setting until it was closed down in 1907.

Today, displays on the dress and pastimes of Saratoga 100 years ago have replaced the roulette wheels and poker tables, although one room is still preserved as a gambling den. The third floor has been decorated to show how a prominent Saratoga family lived during the 19th century, using the furniture, clothing and belongings from the home of Reuben Hyde Walworth, the last Chancellor of the state of New York.

The staff at The Casino can also direct visitors to the host of other museums and attractions in the area. "There is so much to do in Saratoga," commented Susan Mark at The Casino. "We try to set people straight because we know they don't always have a lot of time."

shot by putting his mallet in the way of the striking player. A cross hook occurs when the player reaches over his opponent's mount in an attempt to hook; this is considered a foul.

Neckshot: A ball which is hit under the horse's neck from either side.

Offside: The right hand side of the horse.

Ponies: The best polo ponies are of Thoroughbred blood whose main qualities are heart, speed, wind, stamina and the ability to accelerate, stop and turn quickly, and whose temperament is amenable to the rigors of the game. The pony becomes so familiar with the various shots and maneuvers, that he can often anticipate his rider's wishes.

Horses are changed after each period. Those used in the first half may be rested and used in the second half.

Horses' legs are protected by bandages or felt boots. Their tails are tied up and their manes clipped so there is no interference with the swing of the mallet.

There is no height limit for the horses, although most are between 15 and 15.3 hands. The age of a pony is generally between 5 and 15 years.

Positions: Each of the four team members plays a distantly different position, all relating to the number on his back. No. 1 is the most offensive player. No. 2 is just as offensive, but plays deeper. No. 3 is the pivot player between offense and defense and tries to turn all plays to offense. No. 4 or the Back, is the defensive player whose role is principally to protect the goal.

Tailshot: Hitting the ball behind and across the horse's rump.

Bring the family and friends. Pack a lunch or just bring a cooler with wines and cheeses in it to snack on.

An upscale picnic at Myopia Polo

Some field-side parking is available but bring chairs or a blanket in case those spots are taken.

How to get there: Myopia Polo is located on Rte 1A in Hamilton which is exit 20N off Rte. 128.

What to wear: While many spectators get all dolled up, you needn't do so too. It would not be a good idea to show up in cut-off jeans and a T-shirt, but casual dress is appropriate.

Italian Feast Comes

By LIZ WILLEN

Friday night's rain may have cancelled the activities of the Society of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary's annual Italian feast, but it only whetted the appetites of the estimated 4,500 who attended on Saturday.

By the time the parade got under way on Saturday morning, all traces of rain were gone, so nothing could dampen the spirits of the marchers, munchers, prize winners or the dozens of families who enjoyed reunions next to the temporary madonna set up in front of the backstop at Leonard's Field.

"The reason for this whole thing is food, family and religion, and not necessarily in that order," said Police Officer William Saraco, chatting with old friends in front of the bleachers shortly after a mass was offered in the early evening.

Saraco was relaxed as he greeted friends and acquaintances; it was a peaceful and intimate crowd that had gathered on the bleachers as a five-piece band began to play old tunes.

"I'd be suprised if there were two out of 10 faces in this crowd that I didn't know on a first-name basis," added Saraco, as he headed towards the line that had formed in front of the booth where Vinnie's Italian sausage and peppers were being sold.

Danny Gattineri, one of the committee members for the fair, kept busy opening clams and popping pizza into a temporary oven that had been set up in a booth. "It's a lot of fun, and it's a tradition, but the reason behind this whole thing is our fathers," he said. "They started the heritage."

The heritage dates back to the turn of the century, and the idea of the feast evolved after a wave of Italian immigrants came to America before 1920. The Italians chose patron saints to give thanksgiving for a new home and a better life, and the Italians of Winchester chose Aug. 15 for their feast.

However, the tradition died in the mid 60s after a number of first-and second-generations Italians had died. There were not enough people involved to carry on the feast each year until the mid 70s.

A small group of third-generation Italians who founded the current society revived the tradition in 1976. Their desire to build a permanent shrine to the blessed virgin is one of the reasons why they hold the carnival, although this year the society will just about break even after paying for the carnival's expenses.

Still, the temporary madonna wheeled through the procession in the morning to the backstop at Leonard's Field was literally covered with dollar bills by the end of the day.

The backstop was also a popular reunion spot, and old-timers like 82-year-old Rose Marabella of Westley st. were greeting family and friends all day.

"I've marched in every parade the society has held since I've been in Winchester, and I've lived here since I was 9 years old," Marabella said with a smile. "This is a great town for Italians, and a great town for anyone."

Marabella was interrupted several times by other old-timers, who spoke alternately in English and Italian about their many memories of their years in America, Winchester, and the society's feast.

"Hey, Grandma, have some of this," one of Marabella's granddaughters said, handing her a fragrant sausage, peppers and onion hero.

"I can't eat all that!" Marabella insisted, in between conversations and a few hearty bites.

"That's delicious!" she told her granddaughter. "No wonder I've lived so long."

Marabella's 24 grandchildren, 20 great-grandchildren and eight children, five of whom still live in Winchester, couldn't all be with her, but those who could marched along with her in the parade. The crowd surrounding her in front of the madonna all seemed to be related to her in some way.

"I've seen so many friends all day long," she said. "I'll keep coming back as long as I'm alive."

In front of the water balloon game, Lori Vancini of Harvard st. clutched an enormous stuffed parrot that her younger brother, 18-year-old Jim, had won for her.

"I told him to win me something, but I wasn't happy with a little prize," she admitted.

Revival Of A Tradition

Arson Suspected

Fires Strike Beach House, Work Site

Two suspicious fires in the early morning hours on Sunday kept the Winchester Fire Dept. battling blazes for almost five hours, and caused an estimated total of $20,000 in damages, according to Fire Chief Robert McElhinney.

The first fire, called in at 2:26 a.m., heavily damaged the beach shack at Leonard's Pool. All of the lifesaving equipment, including floats, ropes and life preservers, was destroyed, forcing the town to close the beach until Tuesday. The beach was reopened on Wednesday, August 17.

"All of the wooden partitions, the roof and the ceiling was burned," said McElhinney. "There was about $8,000 to $10,000 worth of damage."

McElhinney said there were no leads or suspects, but he did speculate that the fire alarm was sounded by a carnival worker from the Italian festival nearby at Leonard's Field.

By the time firefighters arrived, the fire had been burning undetected for at least an hour, according to McElhinney.

It took the department until 5:15 to put the fire out. "We had to spread the hose almost 300 yards, because the shack is in a very isolated area," said McElhinney. "That's a long way to spread a fire hose, and it took a while to put it out."

Immediately after firefighters put out the blaze at Leonard's pool, they were summoned to Simonds rd., where a house under construction, approximately one third complete, was burning.

"The whole building was a ball of fire when we got there," said McElhinney, who believes the house had been burning for at least an hour before it was called in from a fire alarm box on Wincrest dr. and Ridge st. Because the area is so isolated, and the street is a new one without many residents, it was a while before anyone detected it, he said.

McElhinney does not believe that the two fires were related, although he is positive that the second fire was caused by an arsonist.

"The Fire Department is still investigating, and the state Fire Marshal is looking into it, too," he said. "We're still looking for any clues and suspects."

Total damage to the new building including the lumber in the area that burned as well, was estimated to be about $10,000 by Chief McElhinney.

Lack Of Minority Housing Sparks Town Examination

By LIZ WILLEN

At the moment, there is no fair housing plan or committee in Winchester that actively encourages minorities or low income families to live here. Beyond that, once minorities and those in the low to moderate income groups take one look at the average prices of homes and condominiums in Winchester, they are inclined to look elsewhere.

A Realtor from Swanson Associates said that it was "practically impossible" for lower income groups to afford Winchester prices. "Low income housing just doesn't exist here," the Realtor said. "A minority came into my office the other day and when he found out how much it cost to live on Cambridge st., he said 'forget it.'"

However, the town is now getting to work on a plan to remedy this situation, beginning by assessing the need for low to moderate income housing and the numbers of minorities in town. Using that information, the Town Manager's Office will draft a fair housing plan that should be complete by Sept. 30. Selectmen will also appoint a Fair Housing Director and a committee to keep abreast of fair housing issues.

It wasn't until the town applied for state monies for water and sewage repairs that they discovered they are required by the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) to have a fair housing plan.

MCAD hopes that the plan will be the first step in bringing more minorities to town.

"The plan should create an awareness of the need for more low and moderate income housing, and enable minorities to know more about the community so that they will eventually move to Winchester," said Leon Braitwaith, Chairman of MDAC.

The plan is something that community activists in the area of housing have long encouraged, and something that the League of Women Voters told selectmen

Town Officials To Tackle Future Budget Deficits

By DAVE LEECO

They may have to drastically cut the quality of the ambulance, library, recreation, and fire services the citizens of Winchester have gotten used to.

Or, they may have to hike the fees citizens pay for water, public works services and other benefits granted by the town. New fees, such as one for sewer use, might come into being.

But somehow, town officials recognize they must find some method of staving off budget deficits climbing into the millions within five years.

Realizing that without some solution for avoiding those deficits they will never win Town Meeting's approval of three employee contracts at the planned Special Town Meeting in September, the members of the Board of Selectmen and the Finance Committee will spend the next month coming up with a plan to put the town's finances in balance for the foreseeable future.

The fact that measures will have to be taken to balance the budget was documented last month, when Town Manager Thomas Groux completed his five-year budget forecast. The forecast showed that with the Proposition 2½ laws putting a limit on the amount of money the town can raise through property taxes, and inflation pushing the town's costs up continually, the town's finances would be $571,000 out of line next year and $1.2 million off by July 1, 1987.

But at a joint meeting between three members of the Finance Committee and the Board of Selectmen Monday, all agreed that simply predicting the deficits isn't enough to satisfy Town Meeting.

In May, Town Meeting rejected contracts for the police and school custodians, vowing not to approve the pacts until town officials came up with a five-year budget plan.

"All we have here is a five-year forecast," FinCom Chairman Daniel

Leading The Italian Feast Parade

PARADE — The Italian festival celebrating the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary included a parade Saturday morning from St. Mary's Church on Washington st. to Leonard Field. A temporary shrine to the madonna was carried in the parade to the field and proceeds from the festival will go toward the construction of a permanent shrine in town, according to festival organizers. Former Hill St. Man Charged For Conflict Of Interest In Connection With Contract

By DAVE LEECO

A former Hill st. man who operated a cleaning service out of his home has been indicted by the state Ethics Commission in connection with a $300,000 cleaning contract.

This week, the Ethics Commission issued an Order To Show Cause against Charles Young of Assonet, formerly of 10 Hill st., alleging he gave trips, cash, theater tickets and other items to employees of the Walter E. Fernald School in Waltham in return for a cleaning contact.

Young has 21 days to file a written answer to the conflict-of-interest charges, and will face a public hearing before the Ethics Commission. The commission may impose civil penalties of up to $2,000 for each offense, according to Merry Duffy, director of public education for the commission.

Young, as an officer, employee and/or owner of Minuteman and Woman Contract Cleaners of Hill st. and Olympic Executive Sales of Bedford, N.H., was charged with violating Section 3 of Chapter 268A of the state General Laws — the conflict of interest statute.

The order charges that from July 1, 1978, to June 30, 1981 (the period during which Young's firm was located in Winchester), Young gave Fernald employees items including $500 cash, tickets and traveling expenses to the 1980 Olympics in Lake Placid, N.Y., and tickets, entertainment, food and beverages for a Boston Harbor cruise.

Those Fernald employees, the order states, "were responsible for the awarding of contracts to (the two firms) and for the approval of and payment of payrolls, invoices and purchase orders related to these businesses."

During the 1978 to 1981 period, Minuteman and Olympic provided $300,000 worth of housekeeping goods and services to the Fernald School, the order states.

The tickets, cash and travel expenses, the order states, "were given for or because of the official acts of those (Fernald) employees."

According to Duffy, no date has been set for the Ethics Commission hearing, and there is no requirement a hearing be held within a certain time after the order is issued.

Meader's WHA Term Will Not Be Shortened

Despite a resident's contention that the selectmen and Winchester Housing Authority should not have appointed the WHA's newest member for a four-year term, selectmen seem inclined to stick with the decision.

Mary Pronski of Washington st. told selectmen Monday, "I believe in my heart an error was made" in appointing Mary Meader to fill the remainder of the late John Henry Van Dyke's Housing Authority term.

Pronski contended that the appointment should only be until the next town election, and noted that in 1975, the town did just that in the case of another Housing Authority vacancy.

In a joint meeting between selectmen and WHA members last month, Meader was elected on a 5-0 vote. Three selectmen, Edward O'Connell, John Williams and Alan Macdonald, along with one Housing Authority member, Herbert Hamilton, abstained from the vote to protest the closing of nominations before they could look into the candidacy of William J. White, a former head of federal, state and private housing programs.

But even those selectmen who abstained say there is no question Meader is the newest Housing Authority member, and that the question is only how long she will keep that post.

Nor are the selectmen inclined to push that question, since Town Counsel Douglas Randall said he believes the appointment should be for the remainder of Van Dyke's five-year term which will expire in 1987.

Selectman Willaims stated that "While I may disagree with town counsel, he is our lawyer and I will take his advice until it is interpreted as incorrect."

That interpretation would come from the courts, if Pronski was willing to file a 10-taxpayer suit (so called because it needs the backing of 10 citizens) against the appointment.

The only other way to change Meader's term would be if the Housing Authority and selectmen voted in another joint session to change the term of office.

Meader had the support of a majority of the joint boards for her appointment, and would be able to vote on the change in term herself. Only one selectman - Macdonald - said he was inclined to even consider a change.

Selectmen will hold a joint meeting with the WHA members to tell them of Pronski's opinion. But O'Connell said, "I see this being oriented more toward an informational meeting, not one at which this will be brought to a vote."

FESTIVAL RIDES — Part of the Italian festival last weekend was a wide selection of carnival rides, including the one being enjoyed here by Harry D'Arcangelo and his son Scott and niece Jonell Brigham, all of Woburn. (Staff Photo by Amy Sweeney)

Police Log

Monday, Aug. 8

- When a dirt bike failed to stop on Arlington st., police chased the 14-year-old Salem st. driver to Westland ave., High st. and finally to the intersection of Cambridge and Church st.'s, where the bike was clocked at 60 mph.

According to a report filed by Officer Barry Donaghey, the bike crossed the yellow line on Church st. and attempted to make a left turn onto Fletcher st. At that time, a Ford Fairmont traveling west on Fletcher st. stopped in the middle of the intersection after seeing the bike on the wrong side of the road. The bike then smashed into the windshield of the car and turned upside down.

The youth landed on the pavement, and was conscious and not bleeding when the amublance from Winchester Fire Dept. arrived. He was taken to Winchester Hospital's Emergency Room, where he was treated for a broken wrist and released.

Police issued the youth a citation for failure to stop for a police officer, as well as a citation for having no license, failing to stop at a stop sign and operating an unlicensed, unregistered recreational vehicle.

Officrs Kevin Mawn, John Alford and Lt. Perritano made the arrest after searching in the area of Highland ave. and South Border rd. for a man fitting a description given to them three hours earlier by an 18-year-old Winchester woman and her father.

According to Chief John McHugh, the woman was watching television when a man whom she thought was a family member came to the door. The man, a stranger, exposed himself. He then attemepted to sexually assault the woman, but she fought him off. The man then fled the house. The girl's father came home as the man was escaping. The father chased him, but could not catch him.

Revere Police broke up the fight, and the two youths went to Winchester Hospital Emergency Room, where Winchester Police were notified. The youths were treated and released.

Man Flees TV And Video Shop After Passing Phony Check

Winchester Police and BayBank officials are investigating an attempted check-passing incident Friday at Winchester TV and Video.

A man identifying himself as a Thomas Accardi of Malden fled from the Thompson st. store when owner Hugo La Fauci told him he would have to verify the man's $3354.75 treasurer's check.

"The man came in a week before and was looking over top of the the line equipment," said La Fauci. "He was making a mental note of costs, and I was suspicious right away. I told him if he wanted the merchandise he would have to come forward with the cash."

Instead of coming with the cash, the man returned with a treasurer's check from BayBank in the amount of $3354.75.

"He told me the check came out of the BayBank office in Everett, and I told him I would contact them. At that point, he fled the store and I called the police. He took off in the truck just before the police got there."

"LaFauci did the right thing by calling the bank," said Chief John McHugh. "Merchants should be very careful, especially with strangers on large purchases. I hardly think the check was certified. The guy knew the gig was up and he fled."

La Fauci still has the check in his possession, and police and BayBank are still looking into the matter. If found, the man could be arrested for attempted larceny through forgery, according to Chief McHugh.

Mini-Campers Finish Program With Week Of Biking

During the week of Aug. 8 to the 12, Winchester Recreation Dept.'s minicampers participated in Fun With Bikes, the seventh and final week of minicamps.

The campers began their week Monday morning with a treasure hunt through Winchester. The afternoon was filled with a combination of games and bicycle polo.

On Tuesday, the campers biked to Arlington to the Jason Russell House, where they were given an informative tour of the pre-Revolutionary house. After a picnic lunch at Sandy Beach, participants played frisbee and swam at Sandy Beach.

The minicampers spent Wednesday morning at the Stone Zoo, after which they swam the afternoon away at the MDC pool in Stoneham.

On Thursday, the minicampers took a break from biking to take a bus trip to Bridge Battle ave. in Concord where the fight for United States independence began. Thursday afternoon was spent fishing in Wedge Pond.

For minicampers and counselors, Friday was the final day of camp, which they celebrated with a cookout. Bikers decorated their bikes and participated in a bike parade. Prizes were awarded for the three best decorated bikes. Third place went to Melanie Dunlop, second place to Michael Queenan, and first place to Tucker Brandt.

Asst. Supt. Fallon Granted Leave Of Absence

The changes in the School Department's Central Office continue as a one-year leave of absence has been granted to Assistant Supt. Jack Fallon.

This spring, Fallon had requested that his work week be cut in half for the coming year. He won the backing of Supt. William MacDonald. But on reconsidering, Fallon decided that working part time would not be best for him or for the school system and he requested a leave-of-absence for the coming year.

"His feeling on maintaining a high standard of performance was that (working 20 hours per week) will not work for him," acting Supt. Robert Forest told the School Committee last week, "He would like to sort out some things — have a year to put things in perspective."

Although School Committee member Catherine Alexander said that it was not usual or good policy to give leaves-of-absence to management, Committee Chairman Constance Papas said that in Fallon's case, the committee should make an exception.

"Because Mr. Fallon has done so much good work, we owe him recognition," said Papas. "He's been with the school system almost 10 years. It's not just budgets he's excellent at. He's spent many hours on negotiations, at which he's superb, and he's an excellent manager of people and resources.

Library Holds Fall Lectures

The Program Committee of the Friends of the Winchester Public Library has been working this summer to plan an exciting lecture series for the months of September, October and November.

On Sunday, Sept. 25, at 2:30 p.m., Jane Holz Kay will be speaking on "Boston: City on the Hill; City on the Block" Sol Gittleman will speak on Wednesday, Oct. 26, at 7:30 p.m. on "The American Immigrant Experience;" and on Thursday, Nov. 17, at 7:30 p.m., Noel Perrin will speak on "Writing about the Country."

As a bonus, on Wednesday, Oct. 12, in honor of National Poetry Month, poet X.J. Kennedy will present an evening of poetry for families. This last will also be at 7:30 p.m., but is not part of the lecture series and will be free.

More information about each of the speakers will be published before each lecture.

Jane Holtz Kay, author of "Lost Boston"

In addition to planning programs for the town to enjoy at the public library, the Friends hope to continue to raise funds to help the library to become a center of cultural life in Winchester. It is hoped that more residents will take advantage of the riches in the library and that those who wish to take a more active role will join the Friends of the Winchester Public Library.

Fliers describing the Fall Lecture Series are available at the library.

Lottery Proceeds Help Fund Town Art Show And Activity Brochure

Winchester's share of the state Arts Lottery proceeds will help sponsor an art show for residents and a brochure on the town's many art activities.

The Winchester Arts Lottery Council has announced that grants totalling $1,730 will be distributed to the Winchester Art Assn. and artist Cornelia Nichols.

Council Chair Kathleen Indigaro said the applications approved by the Winchester Council have been certified by the Massachusetts Arts Lottery Council at the State House.

The Winchester Art Assn.'s grant is for their Annual Prize Painting Show to be held Nov. 4, 5, and 6 at Town Hall. The show will be free and open to the public.

Cornelia Nichols will use her grant for a brochure on the arts in Winchester and a supplement to be distributed in town. Also a list of people in the town who are professionals in their fields will be made available at the library.

In making the announcement, Indigaro noted that the current grant of $1,730 is almost four times the amount received in the first distribution in July, 1982.

"The success of the Megabucks lottery game for the arts has encouraged all of us who care about the cultural life of our community," said Indigaro. "These funds are needed and appreciated. With them creative people in Winchester will receive the support they need to continue their artistic contribution."

The total July statewide grant distribution is $935,600. The funds are the 1982 proceeds of the Megabucks lottery game for the arts. Grant applications are approved by local arts lottery councils and then reviewed by the Massachusetts Arts Lottery Council to certify that the applications meet the criteria recommended by a panel of art administrators.

Applications are now being received for the next distribution. Deadline Oct. 7

ART BOOST — The arts in Winchester got a big boost recently with the presentation of a $1,730 check from the state arts lottery. The funds will go to the Art Association to fund the group's show which will now be free to the public and to the effort to put together a booklet on the town's artists. Edward E. Goodwin, President of the Winchester Co-Operative Bank, and Susan Vrotsos accept the check for the Art Association. (Staff Photo by Amy Sweeney)

Markey Proposes Bill To Cut Telephone Rates

Cong. Edward J. Markey, ranking majority member on the House Telecommunications Subcommittee, has introduced legislation aimed at helping consumers meet the burden of upcoming increases in local telephone bills.

Markey's legislation, the Consumer Communication Act of 1983, would result in an estimated 30 to 40 percent savings on long distance telephone rates.

The bill would reduce the new "access charge" that all consumers are scheduled to begin paying in January. The "access charge" was an offshoot of the recent break-up of American Telephone and Telegraph.

Under the current plan, consumers would pay $2 a month beginning in 1984. This charge would increase to $8 a month by 1989.

Markey's legislation calls for a 50 cent charge in 1984 and a final cap of $5 a month in 1994.

"Residential consumers cannot — and should not — be asked to pick up so much of the burden of paying for the national phone systems so quickly after the break-up of AT&T," Markey said.

Businesses would also see a more gradual phase-in of their new charges. The current plan adds $6 a month to business bills in 1984, increasing to $8 a month by 1989. The Markey plan reduces the 1984 figure to $1.50. To make up for the monies lost by lowering the residential rate, Markey's bill moves businesses to a $15 a month charge by 1994.

"With the gradual phase-in, businesses will still pay less under my plan than the current scheme for the next few years," Markey explained.

Other bills before Congress would abolish the long distance savings and use the rate reduction to fund massive subsidies for "high cost" phone service areas. These areas include rural states as well as high-growth Sunbelt states in the South and West.

Unlike other legislation submitted in recent weeks, Markey said his bill targets its aid to consumers in urban and suburban areas — not rural regions — and limits the flow of money from the New England area to the South and West for phone bill subsidies.

"I have a great concern for the poor and those in rural areas that cannot afford their service," Markey said. "But I do have a problem with Massachusetts residents subsidizing Sun Belters. Markey contended that "such a plan does little to help those who really need help in paying their phone bills — the elderly and the disadvantaged."

"New England Telephone has built an efficient and low cost phone system in our state. We should not be expected to pay for those who chose to move to a new area or who are served by a less efficient carrier, if they can pay for themselves."

Markey's bill also establishes a targeted "lifeline" subsidy to provide low cost ($2 - $4 a month) phone service to those elderly or other individuals who are unable to afford the upcoming phone bill increases.

The Markey bill will also provide for a comprehensive federal study on changes in the phone system, citizen participation before federal regulatory agencies, and competition for service on toll calls that are made intra-state.

THANK YOU.

A 10% withholding tax on savings account interest is a bad idea. For both savers and banks. When it was proposed as federal legislation, thousands of you didn't like it. So you took our advice and wrote a letter to your Congressman expressing strong opposition to the bill. So did we. Well, it was a tough fight, but we finally won.

Because the American public didn't want or need it, Congress has killed the savings interest withholding tax bill. But it would have never happened without you. So we'd like to publicly thank you for all your help. Together, all our voices did make a difference.

Eating Tops Sex As Favorite Activity

By TERRY MAROTTA

Sex isn't the main thing the human race is interested in, I've decided. In fact, sex doesn't even come close.

What people are really interested in, more than about anything else - more than sleeping, or scratching itches, or watching James Bond movies, or sneezing really good sneezes - is eating.

People love to eat.

Eating is what it's all about. Some say we eat to live, but those who really know the score realize that most people live to eat.

I've been observing eating patterns lately, both at the top and at the bottom of the evolutionary ladder. There are many styles and methods whereby the various organisms take in their victuals, but whoever's doing it, it seems to get done, quite universally, with a great deal of relish.

Take dogs, for example. Dogs eat the way humans would if types like Emily Post and her gang hadn't got hold of us and civilized us some. They stand over that bowl of dog-chow and try to inhale every morsel of it at once. They get their ears in it, some of them; their ears trail around right in there with the horsemeat or the Gravy Train or the sour cottage cheese. And they don't even mind. I had a dog that used to stand in her supper as a puppy. What did she care about getting her dinner between her toes? She would have taken a bath in the stuff if she could have figured out how to.

'Eating is what it's all about. Some say we eat to live but those who really know realize that most people live to eat.'

Cats show a little more restraint. They eat delicately, in small precise bites. They pretend to be disdainful of certain foods, they make contemptful and superior faces as they back away with tiny offended steps, but this is largely a put-on. They're not really as finicky as they make out. They just want to be very sure you don't place them in the same food-etiquette category as those loony distant cousins of theirs, the dogs.

Fish, too, eat with great excitement, I've noticed. My tropical fish have brains the size of a dust-mote, and eyes no bigger than a pinhead, but the minute I so much as walk into the room, they put on a spectacle, banging their tin cups against the bars of their jail cell, so to speak. They crowd over toward me, jamming up in one corner of the tank, shimmying like molecules in a water-drop, their tiny minds intent on a meal from that foul-smelling canister of bug-flakes. Then when they do eat, they eat like ancient Romans, with a gusto that borders on repulsiveness, biting off bigger mouthfuls than they can possibly accommodate, only to spit them back out again in shrapneled clouds of dried worm.

Even flies have their own unique method for addressing a meal. They're the ones, you'll recall, who throw up on everything first. They're also the ones who wash their little hands with such thoroughness, showing wonderful pre-meal hygiene. They must have good mothers, I always find myself thinking, as I watch them do this: they have such lovely manners.

But nobody warms up to eating like we humans do. We rub our hands together too, figuratively speaking, each time we contemplate a meal. Fast-food chains know all about this. Why else to they make commercials showing full-color close-ups of hamburgers drooling with juice? Think about it: have you ever watched one of these ads, even directly after dinner, without experiencing advanced levels of salivation? I certainly haven't.

People display various styles of ingestion too, just as the denizens of the animal world do. Some make rapid ducking movements with their heads, like chickens pecking, while others simply lower their jaws down toward the plate and shovel the stuff in, front-end loader style. They make neither pause nor pretense at conversation; plate-vacuumers, I call them.

There are the Zorro types, of course, who brandish the cutlery in swoops and flashes. They show a surgical style, using the knife like a scalpel, clinically dissecting their victim, the baked potato. And then there are the tentative eaters who chew with lowered eyes, who confront with mute alarm the uncuttable lamb chop, the embarrasment of peas.

The tentative eater abides in all of us, in fact, and I've noticed this in particular: we are all slightly embarrassed, as a whole, to be seen eating - to be caught at it, I mean. It's one thing to dine in the company of other diners. That's no worse than participating in other common humiliations, like being asked to take a shower in the company of other showerers. But think how you'd feel if you were the only one showering, in the midst of a lot of people who weren't. It's that way with eating.

None of us likes, in particular, to be interrupted while eating, to be caught when the doorbell rings, bibbed up and with a plate in front of us: a few limp trees of broccoli, a devastation of potatoes, and one mutiliated chicken breast.

Why this reticence, I wonder? Here is reason and conclusion both: if eating is our chief hobby, it's also our closest link with the earth and the lower orders. We're no better than the humble toad or cockroach in our need to take nurishment at regular intervals. We're swell creatures, still, the crown of creation, the ruling jewel of nature, but we're not so sublime that we don't have to stoke the furnace, to fill up the tank, just like every other living thing. Thus our passion for ingestion, thus our sustaining romance with the knife and fork. Thus does eating occupy the chief place of interest in our minds.

Seen from this point of view, sex very obviously comes in a distant second. We feel a powerful mandate to reproduce ourselves, sure; and that's what sex is all about. But our first priority is to maintain the existence of the us that wants reproducing.

So! Bring on the Cheese Doodles! You only live once!

Fitzpatrick Announces For Legislature

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I wish to announce that I am running again for senator in the Silver-Haired Legislature Election to be held on Wednesday, Sept. 21, at polling places to be announced by the Council on Aging.

Although my year has been marked by the traumatic loss of my husband Richard, I have kept involved in the concerns and needs of my peers.

I hope to work even harder the second time around!

Thank you for voting for me.

Sincerely yours,
Marion K. Fitzpatrick

Some Light Reading About Alaskan Joggers

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

To lighten up the letter side of your next issue, I thought the following could be of interest. It was taken from the "Public Safety Report" of the Cordova (Alaska) Bulletin on a recent trip to that city:

"A jogger running along the Copper River Highway at Mile 8 around midnight on July 11 reported being followed by a brown bear. The bear followed the runner for about a mile before he was able to flag down a car. The runner was advised to run during the daytime."

Now, there is some practical advice!

Sincerely,
Donald H. McLean

How Can Elderly Exist on Fixed Incomes?

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Here we go again. I know these small pieces have no effect on our affluent, but to thinking people, they should be of some interest.

With rents going up as of Jan. 1, 1984, and Medex 3 going up about $15 per three months, and our telephone company increasing the low billings for our elderly, how can our elderly survive on a limited income?

We have two kinds of elderly — the well-to-do elderly and the poor. So poor that they can't eat properly. For example, living on Social Security, as some do, how can you buy the necessities of life, like fruit, meat, etc?

Even the basic foods like milk and bread are out of this world.

Mr. Reagan thinks everything is fine. Sure, he can smile all the way to the bank. He really doesn't know which way the elderly are heading with all these increases coming in our new year. (Who cares?)

Most young people today think the elderly have it made. But I say they do not, except for a few.

Today you either pay your bills or eat. You cannot do both on not-enough cash. The big wigs who don't do much except talk and talk and live on expense accounts, have no medical bills, two homes and more than one Cadillac can't live on $69,000 a year so they have to have a 15 percent increase now.

I would hope there is some justice and they would think of our elderly once in awhile and how they exist on $4,000 a year.

Sincerely,
Louise Chase.

P.S. It costs $30,000 to keep a man in jail for one year. So one-sided.

Kraus voted no.

A "Yea" vote is for the 4 cent excise tax hike. A "Nay" vote is for the 5 percent sales tax.

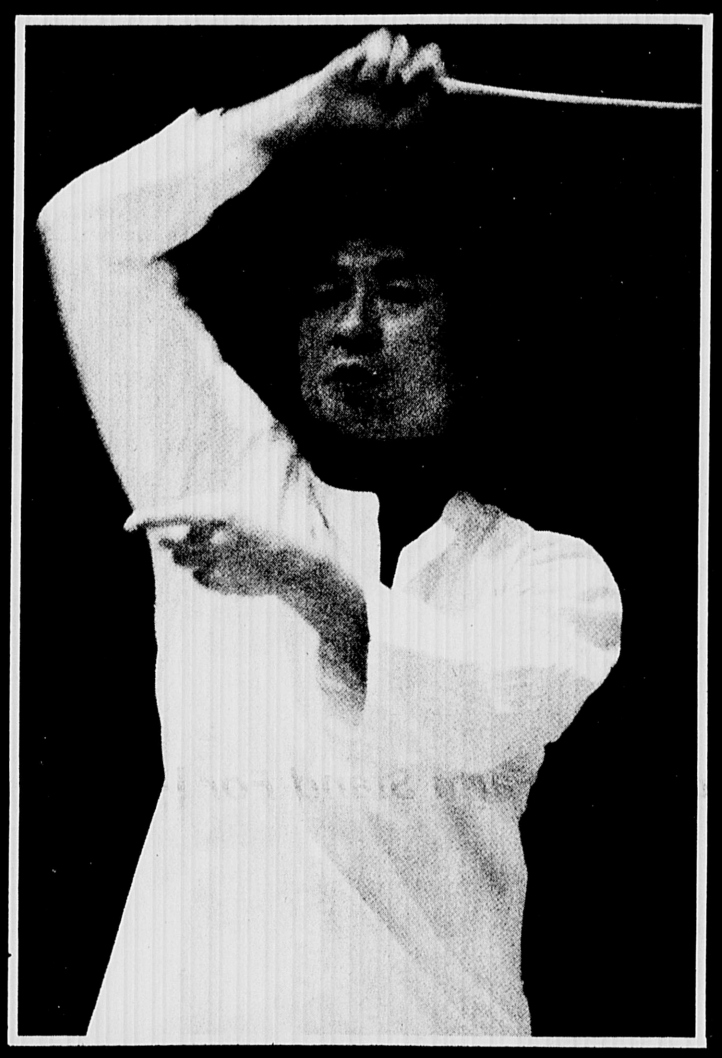
Tanglewood

Where Music Is In The Mountain Air



By Leslie Kandell

A violinist once described the experience of playing in the Boston Symphony Orchestra as "being in the outer porches of Heaven." If that is so, then the inner porches must surely be at Tanglewood, the Berkshire estate where the orchestra makes its summer home, its members playing three concerts a week under renowned conductors and coaching some 500 accomplished musicians in their 20s who come from around the world to study and perform in the Berkshire Music Center.

Tanglewood was given its name by Nathaniel Hawthorne, who spent the winter of 1850 living in a little red house still standing just outside it, and subsequently wrote "Tanglewood Tales."

The 210-acre property, just south of Lenox, is but one of the vast estates in what was to become a luxurious turn-of-the-century New York-New England watering spot. Although Edith Wharton built Henry James his own room in her home — which is known as The Mount, and now houses a Shakespeare theater group — President Teddy Roosevelt and her other frequent visitors stayed at grand hotels such as the Red Lion Inn, which is still alive and serving after 200 years.

The 1936 donation of the Aspinwall-Tappan estate to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, and the 1938 completion of a concert shed by Eliel Saarinen changed the face of the Berkshires.

Summer cottages sprang up around the area's natural lakes. Chamber music recitals (a natural spinoff from any nucleus of musicians) filled churches and inns. Tourism boomed.

To present-day pilgrims, Tanglewood appears to rise fully formed out of the mist, perhaps like Brigadoon or Bali Ha'i, with spacious lawns, hanging pots of fuschias and geraniums, bustling cafeteria, music and gift shops, elegant garden niches, and stages large and small with performing musicians.

The focus of Tanglewood's public activities is the unwalled Shed, used weekends for BSO concerts and open rehearsals, as well as for pre-concert recitals.

During the week there are concerts by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, led by talented student conductors such as Seiji Ozawa and Leonard Bernstein once were, and great conductors as well. In fact, two BMCO guest conductors this summer have been Seiji Ozawa and Leonard Bernstein.

You don't have to buy a seat to attend a concert, and everyone who wants to attend a concert gets in. People may arrive early, buy lawn admission and stop at the cafeteria or wine booths. Many bring their own picnics, ranging from brown bag fare right up to lavish spreads with tablecloths, sparkling glassware, candlesticks and wine. (Several places sell prepackaged picnics.)

Famous performers not necessarily associated with the BSO give Thursday evening chamber recitals in the theater, and BMC students present chamber music there Sunday mornings. Week nights there are vocal and chamber recitals in the Chamber Music Hall. On weekdays, the perfectly manicured grounds are open free to the public, and the original Main House and other buildings echo with the sound of practicing.

Tonight's chamber concert, by the Sequoia String Quartet, is the concluding event in Tanglewood's Annual Festival Of Contemporary Music. (In a pleasantly ironic twist, the final piece is one of the Razoumofsky quartets by Beethoven.)

Thursday, Aug. 25, is something of a celebration. Known as Tanglewood On Parade, it begins at 2 p.m. with a trombone fanfare. During the afternoon there will be continuous recitals by BMC students and the Boston University Tanglewood Institute, comprised of profession-bound teenagers who work with an adjunct coaching faculty.

There will be bagpipers, popcorn, a military band, and an antique train with conductors Ozawa and John Williams waving all the way from Lenox to Tanglewood.

The big evening event is the joint concert by the BSO and student orchestras. The program is

The program is always eclectic, and traditionally ends with Tschaikowsky's 1812 Overture (real cannon) after which there are fireworks over the Stockbridge Bowl, a lake easily seen from the lawn.

Weekend concerts are Fridays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8:30 p.m., and Sundays at 2:30 p.m. Friday's tickets include a 7 p.m. Prelude recital with general seating, so even lawn passholders can sit in the most expensive seats they can find.

Saturday mornings there is an open rehearsal of Sunday's program, for those who plan to spend Sunday hiking, antiquing or at one of the lakes.

The final concert of the classical season is Sunday, Aug. 28, when soprano Jessye Norman and the Boston Boy Choir will join the women of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the BSO for a performance of Mahler's Third Symphony.

Weekly program and ticket information for all Tanglewood and Berkshire Music Center events is available at 1-(413)637-1940.

The Tanglewood season continues through Labor Day weekend with a Sept. 2 appearance by Willie Nelson, Bette Midler on Sept. 4 and on Sept. 5 Neil Young. After that, it's quiet and stillness, lakes and mountains.

How To Get There

Take the Mass. Pike to Exit 2, Lee, and follow signs to Tanglewood, which is on Route 183, less than 2 miles south of Lenox. Buses are available to Lenox and Stockbridge.

What To Wear

Spruce up, if you like — Tanglewood ushers always dress formally — or come as you are.

What To Do

A good way to find out what is going on in the area is through The Berkshire Eagle's Friday magazine section. There are also numerous brochures on area sights available and a slick quarterly magazine, Berkshire Magazine full of information.

Some of the major sights to be considered during a visit to Lenox include:

• The Mount — the former home of novelist Edith Wharton, now home of Shakespeare & Company which is in its sixth season of performing Sharkespeare under the stars. Through Aug. 27 "The Comedy of Errors" is given Tuesdays through Saturdays. There are special rates for seniors, students and children. The Greek Revival home is open for tours until Labor Day.

• The Lenox Blacksmith and Tool Museum — a 19th century blacksmith shop.

• The Lenox Library — An 1815 Greek Revival building once the court house, now on the National Register of Historic Places.

• Pleasant Valley Wildlife Sanctuary — A Mass. Audubon Society sanctuary with trailside museum and 14 miles of trails.

• Visitors who have time in the Berkshires to do some traveling and shopping should consider Stockbridge with its Theatre Festival, the Daniel Chester French estate of Chesterwood, and the Norman Rockwell Museum. The Shaker Village museum in Hancock is an interesting visit. Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival is located in Becket. Sanford White's 45-room Searles Castle is open in Great Barrington.

In Williamstown there are Williams College and the Clark Art Institute to see. The Berkshire area includes the Mohawk Trail, the Albert Schweitzer Center, numerous other museums and historic homes and natural sights. It is an area where one could spend days .

The Berkshires offer year-round activities including skiing, fishing and camping. For travel information, write the Berkshire Vacation Bureau, 20 Elm st., Pittsfield, 01201, or call (413)443-9186.

they all assemble on the platform and greet Mawn.

Her easy rapport with the group is obvious. They all talk at once, then Rocky from Roslindale frisks Jennifer, a routine that takes place every night before they go out. "We're not allowed to carry any guns or weapons at all," explains Mawn, who is giggling as Rocky frisks her. "It makes me feel a lot better, anyway. We have each other for protection ."

"As long as this rain keeps up, we're riding the trains all night," Turnbow tells the group.

The group doesn't always ride the trains, though. On a given night, they may stalk the Boston Common, the Combat Zone, or areas of Roxbury where one of the members may have heard about a possible fight. On this night, the group breaks up and Mawn and eight other members of her patrol go on to Ashmont Station in Dorchester at the end of the Red Line.

The territory is familiar to Mawn, who is getting to know parts of Boston that she once only knew she was supposed to stay away from. "After the murder of the 11-year-old Dorchester girl last month, some of these neighborhoods were really tense," Mawn recalls. "Now, I'm ready for anything."

At Ashmont, the group is relaxed, although alert, in between the coming and going of trains. Made up of members ranging in age from 15 to 31, the group is a restless one — constantly leaning against station walls, effecting karate poses (one of the patrol members is an expert and is teaching the others) pacing the platform or practicing dance steps.

"Hey, Jennifer, maybe we'll all come out to Winchester some time to aggravate the birds and the squirrels," Rocky teases Mawn.

"We all thought it was pretty funny when we heard a Winchester girl was going to join Guardian Angels," explains Mawn's fellow patrol member Del Babineau from Lynn. "I mean, Winchester is not exactly known for its Guardian Angels."

Mawn realizes that she doesn't look like a candidae for the Guardian Angels, who have been traditionally dominated by black and Hispanic males.

She laughs as she remembers her desire to join Guardian Angels two months ago. "On the way home from Boston, I was sitting on the train, and all of a sudden the Guardian Angels got on," she recalls. "They looked so tough and strong and capable that I suddenly felt safe. So I thought, if I can make someone feel that good, then I want to be an Angel, too."

Mawn simply walked over to the group and asked how she could join. "I was all dressed up in pink and pearls," she laughs. "They weren't sure what to think of me — I l[illegible]d so sweet."

The l[illegible]d to Mawn, told her how to jo[illegible] called her mother to explain [illegible] a Guardian Angel would ent[illegible]

"I was v[illegible]urprised and frightened by the whole thing," recalls Maureen Mawn, Jennifer's mother. "But after I talked to the patrol leader, and Jennifer and I talked it out, I felt a lot more comfortable. Now, I'm delighted and very proud of her. She's getting great exposure to the city — she's so sheltered in Winchester."

"Most of the other Angels come from the very end of the Orange Line" says Mawn. "Winchester has very few minority groups and practically everyone in my patrol is a minority. I'd heard all kinds of things about blacks before this — that they were tough, and that they hate whites — but they are people, not races. We all become one race when we're on patrol. I don't even think about who is from where anymore."

Mawn's patrol members did think about where she was from, though. "They asked me if I ate off gold plates like everyone else in Winchester, and someone in my patrol asked me if I had a limousine," Mawn laughs.

Mawn still takes a lot of good-natured teasing from the group. Not only is she the first Guardian Angel from Winchester, she is also one of five women in a male-dominated patrol. Even the MBTA police inspector at Ashmont Station was joking about it.

"Look at her," he laughs, pointing out Mawn to the man collecting tokens in the station. "You see a bunch of black guys with red hats on and people don't know what to think it is. What's a girl from Winchester doing with those guys, anyway?

"No one can change my view of this," replies Mawn, not quite sure of what the inspector has just said about her. She pauses for a moment as a train pulls into Ashmont. "I like to think we're doing something important and good. I don't really care what anyone else has to say about me."

Mawn learned to handle comments such as, "Are you one of Charlie's Angels?" after her first night on the job.

"These two little old ladies came up to me," she recalls. "And they said, 'Go home, honey, and don't stand there like a man. Learn how to cook — you shouldn't be hanging around here.' "

But Mawn thinks she belongs where she is tonight, and she wishes other Winchester kids would join as well.

"We need more suburban kids," she points out. "It's a great experience for them to get to know more about the city and understand it. People would be so much less afraid if they only knew more about it."

When a train comes into the station, Mawn moves with her patrol; she is alert and quick to follow the hand signals of her leader. She is one of the last to get on the train, making sure everyone else is on before resuming her position against the doors, one hand grasping each pole.

As the Red Line makes its way towards South Station, Mawn and her patrol members continue to give each other hand signals that resemble a strange, yet graceful sign language. They also laugh and make faces at one another; it is a slow night and the group is having fun.

"I never realized how much the whole group experience would mean to me," Mawn says later on, when the women in the patrol take a break at Washington Station to visit the bathroom. "This is a very close and solid group. There are no cliques, no one is left out, and no one feels bad about themselves. We're protective of each other, both physically and psychologically. It really is like family."

At the end of every patrol, Mawn's "family" accompanies her back to Wellington Station. On the way, Mawn resumes her position guarding the door, and suddenly spots her best friend from Malden on the next car over.

"Oh no!" she exclaims. "I haven't told her about this yet, and now she knows. She's going to be all upset and worried. I'm going to have to calm her down."

Mawn is obviously very calm about the whole thing herself. As the train pulls into Wellington, Mawn's patrol accompanies her thorugh the station. "It's been a uneventful night, but I've had a lot of fun," she says.

She has played the role of the protector all night and now she enjoys the protection of being taken through the station, where her mother's waiting car will whisk her back to a different world in Winchester.

"I wish all the other kids in my patrol could have trees, gardens, flowers and a yard," she says, pointing out that she now intimately knows the neighborhoods where her patrol members have grown up, while many of them still have no idea where Winchester is.

On her next patrol, anything could happen; but Mawn doesn't worry at all. "I'm not afraid to go anywhere with them," she says, waving a fond good night to her patrol. "I know we'll take care of each other."

★ Housing

that they needed several years ago when they did a survey pointing to the need for more low and moderate income housing.

"It's about time we get around to having an intelligent housing plan," said Judie Muggia, who is active in the League of Women Voters. "Winchester has a history of a white tower mentality in this area, and the town has traditionally wanted to exclude people who cannot afford $100,000 housing. The elderly have been squeezed out, and we're narrowing the average family in Winchester to people who can afford peak housing."

The fair housing policy that Winchester will have by Sept. 30 will be influenced by the fair housing committee that the selectmen chose. It will be the committee's responsibility to coordinate and implement the policy, make recommendations for solutions to the lack of low and moderate income housing, and possibly make suggestions for encouraging minorities to live in Winchester.

They will also be responsible for increasing the public's awareness of the town's committment to fair housing, and act as a clearing house for information about available housing. It will be in charge of publicizing this information, and it must tell the MCAD if local agencies, realtors, and home renters and sellers are complying with the goals and objectives they have set forth as a committee.

The committee will include a member of the Housing Authority, the Planning Board, and three citizens who might represent a special interest organization such as the League of Women Voters, a bank, or an apartment manager.

Muggia suggested that the selectmen take a good look around the community when they choose a committee, and be open about who they appoint. "Attitudes cannot be a criteria-we need expertise," she said. "It's the town's responsibility to offer a broader range of housing, and a good committee can help them do that. Few people want to admit that the town has been discriminatory, but it has been said that if you can't afford to live here, don't. Yet there must be a choice."

Local real estate agents interviewed admitted that there isn't much of a choice for those who can't afford the prices. Realtor and Assessor Sherman Josephson pointed out that the average cost of a one family home in Winchester is somewhere between $110,000 and $125,000. At Wyman Place, condominiums range from $115,000 for the least expensive one bedroom unit, to $239,000 for the highest price three bedroom unit. The Parkview Concominiums on Swanton st. are the least expensive Winchester has to offer; the price of a one-room studio is $39,000 and a five-room, two bedroom unit costs $68,000.

While these prices make Winchester one of the more expensive communities in the area to buy into, it is the high mortgage rates that really put the squeeze on.

"The absolute lowest mortgage rate we've had is $675 on a $75,000 sale," said a realtor from Swanson Associates' office. "This is with an 80 percent loan, and it doesn't include taxes. It's very expensive to buy here."

"I wish more minorities could afford the prices," said Josephson. "I hope the new committee can see to it that they will. I don't think providing more low and moderate income housing would create more than a flurry of controversy, and it would create a diversity."

According to Josephson, a change in the town's zoning laws might be a logical and appropriate place for the committee to begin finding ways for low and moderate income housing.

Town Manager Thomas Groux mentioned several other alternatives that the town could possibly act on, although he noted that the suggestions were premature until the committee is formed.

He indicated that real estate agencies could advertise the town's fair housing policy, or banks could possibly set aside mortgage funds for families that might not normally meet the standard criteria for mortgages.

Groux also pointed out one measure that selectmen had taken in the past, when they prevented the conversion of the Noonan School on Canal st. into condominiums so that it became as rental units for the elderly.

Other communities in the area have found ways to attract minorities and implement fair housing plans. Arlington appointed a Fair Housing Committee in 1980 to educate selectmen on issues of fair housing, and the committee moved town policy makers into a more favorable stance on fair housing.

One of the things the committee did, according to Fair Housing Administrator Joe White, was to ask the high technology firms around Arlington to make referrels of their new minority employees, so that they could be actively recruited and encouraged by the committee to consider living in Arlington.

White said the committee did a lot to change perceptions of minority groups about Arlington, and was also successful in publishing a fair housing brochure last fall that spelled out the town's fair housing policy.

"We certainly heard some negative reactions, but not as many as we thought," said White. "In fact, we've gotten many letters commending our fair housing policies."

White, who is a Winchester resident, said, "Winchester has tended to be low key about fair housing and no one has really heard much about fair housing in Winchester. But the town can certainly move forward in a positive direction in fair housing,if they take the time to research and garner support in the community for their fair housing activities."

Lexington adopted a fair housing policy in 1981, after a Town Meeting report cited a concern over the lack of racial minority groups and the obstacle of high cost housing. Since then, the town has taken several measures to see that more low cost housing is provided, according to the Assistant to the Town Manager Susan Adler.

"Housing for the elderly has been increased by the conversion of a school to condominiums, and the town took title to several of the units to insure this," Adler explained.

The town also converted a junior high school into low and moderate income units, which will be priced much lower than average condominiums. Prices for a three bedroom condominium will be between $66,000 and $74,000 and the town expects to be sold out before construction is complete in a year from now. There are income guidelines specifying who is allowed to purchase the housing, and subsequent guidelines for future purchase, so that only those who fall into a special income category can buy the units.

Adler said that the town was interested in encouraging diversity of residents, and the movement for fair housing had taken on a life of its own since a fair housing committee first researched the issues in 1979.

The fair housing committee that is appointed in Winchester will have the power to see to it that Winchester implement measures such as the ones taken by Arlington and Lexington to recruit minorities and make it more feasible for low and moderate income groups to afford housing in Winchester.

Although the draft drawn up by Assistant to the Town Manager Rick White is not yet complete, it does include a completed statement that selectmen must sign, stating Winchester's commitment to equal housing opportunities and non-discrimination.

White is in the process of drafting a statement outlining the position of Director of Fair Housing, who will oversee the committee's work and take an active role in fair housing issues in the community. White is also waiting to receive census data from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst that will identify the ethnic make-up of specific neighborhoods in Winchester and identify potential areas where there is little ethnic diversity.

MCAD Chairman Braitwaith said the purpose of the study was to merely identify problem areas. "We don't specify that we want them to house one minority group or another," he said. "We just want a plan that meets our regulations, like Arlington's plan does now.

If the committee is successful as those in neighboring communities, perhaps minorities and those in low to moderate groups will re-consider living in Winchester.

★ Budget

Ciotti told the selectmen Monday. "The Board of Selectmen has to come back with a plan. We have to deliver a balanced budget over the long term."

The problem, both FinCom members and selectmen said, will be to balance the budget without spoiling the quality of services Winchester has traditionally given to its citizens.

"When you talk to people about budget cuts, they say 'Cut' and then they say 'Don't cut my service,'" said Selectmen Chairman Edward O'Connell. "They want a Merlin the Magician to perform magic with the budget."

To the FinCom's Ciotti, the "magic" boiled down to a difficult choice. "There are two options — increase revenues or cut services," he said.

Ciotti seemed to lean toward the first option, noting that, "I can't see a significant reduction in the future" for the school budget, and that "I'm not willing to sacrifice the quality of life in this town" in regards to other services.

But Ciotti said he and the FinCom would "expand the list of sources of revenue as well as expand the list of reductions" offered by Groux.

Groux with his budget forecast, had included a list of possible new fees and reductions to make up the deficits. Using a private firm to run the town's ambulance, putting a sewer use charge, reducing recreation and youth programs, eliminating the archives, constructing a downtown garage to increase parking revenues, cutting library funds, upping department charges, school activity fees, and water rates, closing the West Side Fire Station and paving over the costly-to-maintain clay Packer Courts filled out the list.

Every item on that list would have to become reality by 1987 to balance the budget by then.

That's why the selectmen want more suggestions — O'Connell ordered comments from every town department head and all of the town boards.

O'Connell was also looking for political support for whatever financial plan selectmen finally bring before Town Meetings. "We can't afford to be shot out of the water," he commented. "We have to have support."

Comptroller Al Faggiano noted that several of the numbers used in Groux's forecast could change with the state and national political tide — especially state aid, which Faggiano called "the nut of this whole thing," — which will send between $3.6 and $5 million to the town in each of the next five years according to the forecast.

"The day Tom (Groux) was working on this, they announced there was a new state aid formula being considered that takes in community need," said Faggiano. "If aid is based on need and we're a triple A (bond rated) community, you know where we'll be — at the bottom."

★ Feast

"I just kept trying until I won that parrot," Jim said proudly.

"He told me he didn't know any other girl he'd rather give it to," boasted Lori.

"Hey, I just came here to eat," Jim reminded her, and headed in the direction of the pizza and french fry booths.

"I came to check out the girls," said 12-year-old Sean Dolan of Cranston rd. "I also won two concert shirts, the Stones and Def Lepperd. They're awesome."

His friend Mark Koffman of Madison ave. West also won a collection of concert T-shirts by piercing balloons with darts. "They're pretty cool," he said. "But I'm going to give the Van Halen T-shirt to my girlfriend."

The games weren't the only thing that attracted the youngsters' attention. Sixty-six hundred 50 cent tickets were sold for the eight rides, that included the more relaxed merry-go-round and ferris wheel, and the daring roll o' plane, which didn't appear to be getting many customers.

"We had at least 125 kids try this thing," said one of the carnival attendants. "It's really not as scary as it looks," he added, urging a terrified Winchester Star reporter to give it a try.

Six-year-old Tara Pasquale of Billerica volunteered to accompany the reporter on the daring ride.

"This is great!" she shouted, suspended upside down in a cage that looked over the fair from an extremely high vantage point. "I've been on this four times already. But my cousin screamed so loud that they had to stop and let her off."

The shaken Star reporter managed to wander back to the bleacher area, where three young girls dressed in green and pink and twirling stuffed snakes were dancing spontaneously to the band's music.

"Hey, everybody, look at us!" they shouted, admist the noise and greetings of those arriving before the fireworks.

At 5, a mass was offered by The Rev. George Butera from St. Mary's Church. The sun was still shimmering and the cool evening breeze made the outdoor service "absolutely lovely," according to Angela Dunbar of Chester st.

"It's such a nice crowd here, I should have taken up a collection so that we can find a permanent place for the shrine," Rev. Butera said after the mass.

John Mecurio Jr., the treasurer of the society, felt that the festival was a success despite the fact they broke even, as opposed to earning a great deal of money for the shrine.

"It was bigger than last year's, and if it hadn't rained on Friday night we would have done a lot better," he said. "But the fireworks were terrific, people had their reunions and we carried on the tradition. In that sense, we accomplished a lot."

Mecurio credited the board of directors of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary Inc. for all their help and cooperation. They are Anthony Cirusso, Frank Dattilo, Emidio D'Loreto, John Mangano Jr., Michael Procopio, James Castagno, Rocco DeTeso, Thomas Severino, Anthony Staffiere, and Joseph DiZio.

Perhaps the biggest accomplishment of the day was the continuity of the tradition — a tradition spanning many decades in Winchester's Italian community. The elderly spent the day renewing friendships and feeding their memories, while the younger generation, who will inherit the tradition of the fair as their parents before them did, enjoyed rides, food, entertainment and fireworks.

Eleanor Yore of Brookside ave. and her family of eight brothers and sisters were one such family who shared in both the memories and the tradition.

"My father was an old-time organizer, my brothers and sisters are all here and I've been running into people I know all day long," Yore said. "My grandchildren are enjoying it, and we'll all keep coming back. It's just tradition."

Guardian Angel

Mawn Leaves The Suburbs To Patrol MBTA

By LIZ WILLEN

Jennifer Mawn looks like an angel.

Seated on the comfortable sofa of her Stevens st. home with her fluffy angora cat Lulu purring gently on her lap, she is a radiant picture of innocence and benevolence in a dainty white dress.

But on a recent rainy night, in the dank corriders of Boston's subway stations, the 17-year-old Nazareth Academy senior shed this angelic image. Dressed in black sweats, sneakers, a red beret and a T-shirt, she is out on patrol as a Guardian Angel.

Mawn has been patrolling twice a week for almost two months, and clearly loves every minute of it.

Wearing a whistle around her neck, her eyes dart back and forth as she watches for pickpockets and other potential criminals. When she is with her patrol later on that night, she will know exactly what to do in a crime or emergency situation.

Boarding an Orange Line train from Wellington Station in Medford (where her mother picks her up and drops her off before and after every patrol, Mawn explains what the Guardian Angels do, and what prompted her to join.

"I used to go into Boston and notice all kinds of crime, fights, and pickpocketing going on," she says. "I think the Guardian Angels really make a difference, and can reduce crime in Boston. When people see us, they realize there is another source of protection for them besides the police."

The petite, lady-like Mawn had to go through many training sessions to learn how to be a protector. She has learned karate, CPR, various forms of self-defense and the law. She is still attending training sessions to learn where and when Guardian Angels can step in and take an active role in preventing, stopping and catching criminals.

Stepping off the subway, she points to a flight of stairs leading down to the subway platform. "The other night a man just came flying down the stairs," she says. "We all made a circle around the victim, and someone called the police and an ambulance. Someone else checked the man's breathing and administered CPR, and someone who was designated as a runner (two group members are runners each night) checked the station to find out if anyone in the area knew what happened."

Not all nights are as eventful, however. Mawn is meeting the 22 other members of her patrol (they don't always all go out together, although they always travel in groups of eight or more) at Field's Corner in Dorchester tonight, and she thinks she recognizes two of them at Washington Station.

"Hey, Jennifer, how ya doing?" shouts a short black man whose red beret is covered with beads, buttons, medals and feathers. "Have a good night!" Mawn shouts in return, stepping on the train that has just arrived. As it turns out, the two were not members of Mawn's patrol, but she recognizes many of the other Angels from the training sessions she has been attending on Saturday mornings.

Mawn's group usually meets at South Station, where they do some calisthenics and say a group prayer before going out on patrol. The prayer gives them a feeling of unity which carries them through danger, adventure and on uneventful nights, the same sense of unity exists, and the group has a lot of fun together.

Mawn enjoys the ride to Field's Corner, and, is keenly aware of all the people around her. A blonde girl in preppy clothing is leaning calmly against a pole reading "Gone With The Wind." A heavy-set black woman clutching an oversized shopping bag and plaid umbrella stares openly at her. A man whose breath smells so strongly of alcohol that the stench is noticeable halfway through the car asks a passenger if he has any spare change.

"I really see all types on the train," Jennifer says. "Nothing fazes me anymore. I absolutely love people-watching."

At Field's Corner, Mawn steps off the train onto the platform and keeps an eye on the tracks, waiting. She spots 15 members of her patrol on the next train, and waves to them in excitement.

As the train screeches into the station, a sort of ritual seems to be taking place. All of the Angels aboard know their respective places, and when the train stops, they are the last to get off. Side by side at the doors, they stand with arms folded and whistles ready until all of the passengers have left the train. When leader Lary Turnbow blows his whistle,

A Salute To Those Who Serve

The Lions Club Helps Protect The Gift Of Sight For Winchester Schoolchildren

For years, school children were accustomed to receiving an eye examination in the Winchester Schools every year. However, with the school budget crunch growing more severe, the money needed to rent the eye examination machines was cut from the budget. As a result, it looked as though Winchester school children would have to forego the traditional eye examination.

But thanks to the Winchester chapter of Lions International, the Winchester schools will never have to worry about renting the machines again. Lions International, which raises money for eye research, has purchased two machines for the schools to use on a permanent basis.

"The machine was not in the town budget,' says Dave DeTeso, president of the local Lions chapter. "Without the machines, the kids would not get tested. When we found out that the town did not even put the money in its budget, that's when we said it would be nice to have the machines on hand." The two machines cost $960 each.

In past years, several grades in the schools did not have their eyes examined because the machines could be rented for only a limited amount of time.

"Now the machine is handy," says DeTeso, who has been president of the 24-member chapter for two years. "The machine will be there year round now for the nurses. The schools had had a machine for three months, and then the machine was gone.

"If the nurse had to reexamine someone, she couldn't," DeTeso says. "Now, with the machine permanently in the town, the nurse can go from one school to another at her own leisure.

"It's a good cause," DeTeso says of the machines. "I have a child in the Winchester schools, and I would like her examined every year, instead of once and then skipping a year. Some other members have children in the public schools and would like the same thing."

In addition to raising funds for a special project within the community, the local chapter of Lions International also designates an amount of money to be raised for the international organization. "We give it as a group to Lions International for eye research," DeTeso says. This past year the district that the Winchester club is part of raised $133,000.

Lions International then distributes the funds to various groups concerned with eye research, such as Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary and Children's Hospital in Boston.

The Lions also donate funds to people who cannot afford an eye operation, eyeglasses, or an examination, according to DeTeso. "If someone goes to an eye examination and can't afford it, the Lions Club would pay for the exam." The club has also given money to Perkins School for the Blind in Watertown and the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

The various projects of Lions International require fundraising efforts, of course. "Raising money is difficult," says DeTeso. "So we try any way possible to raise it."

The biggest fund-raiser is an annual Valentine's Day dinner dance, which has been held the past three years at the Sons of Italy Hall in Winchester. "basically, that is how our money is raised," DeTeso says.

The club also had a car wash last fall, and will have a raffle this winter to raise funds. Nevertheless, the dance is the organization's main source of funds. "If it wasn't for the dance, we wouldn't be in business," DeTeso says.

During the dance, the Lions chapter gives a Winchester High School football player the Players' Player Award, given annually in memory of Frank Provinzano, former teacher and trainer at Winchester High School and member of the Lions Club.

"He was such a dedicated person," DeTeso says. "He loved kids."

The player chosen to receive the award is selected by the players themselves. "They pick one player who in their eyes deserves the award — a players' player who went above and beyond what he was supposed to do," DeTeso says.

Selection is also part of the process in joining Lions International. Club members invite prospective Lions to join, DeTeso says. "It's not that we close our membership to anyone, he says. "It's not by word-of-mouth. There are a lot of people who would like to get into an organization and don't know what to get into. This is a non-profit organization of people who like to do something for other people.

"It's hard to get people into an organization where you have to work," DeTeso continues. "This is not a social club. The goal is to raise money for good causes. You have to get a certain type of person to do that," he says. And that kind of person also has to be willing to attend meetings twice monthly.

Two members have been in the local chapter, which received its charter on June 19, 1954, for more than 25 years, and two others have been in Lions International more than 20 years, according to Fred MacDonald, secretary of the local chapter and past president (1969-70.)

"If all who had accepted membership in the club had remained in the club, membership would be 128," MacDonald says. "Time takes its toll, as well as waning interest and enthusiasm."

Lions International, which started in 1917 as a service organization, has more than 35,000 clubs and about 1.3 million members in 154 countries.

DeTeso hopes the chapter's membership will expand in the future. "If the membership were to grow, we would have more people out there to help with donations," he says. "If we had enough money, I'd like to buy hearing machines, too. Right now, our money in our budgets is limited."

Lions International also will pursue their goal of donating to eye research. "I wouldn't like to see anybody blind, but there is nothing you can do about that," DeTeso says. "Of all the senses, I think sight is the one you need the most."

Gray Bowl winners Neil and Kathy Hurley

Hurleys Take Husband-Wife Tourney Again

By CHARLOTTE MERYMAN

Nobody ever said it wasn't a predictable tournament — and with good reason.

Neil and Kathy Hurley won for the fifth year in a row; Ralph Bates and Roberta McNamara crashed the party in costume for the third year in a row; Al Samoiloff threw his racket away in a fit of anger (then retrieved it) for the second year in a row; and the top four seeds finished in the exact positions in which they started.

But in spite of — or perhaps due to — its predictability, the annual E. Whitney Gray Husband and Wife Tennis Tournament has truly become a Winchester institution.

Forty-one couples competed this weekend in the 10-year-old Winchester Tennis Assn. tourney, which ended in a 6-3, 6-3 win by the Hurleys over Pinky and Al Samoiloff.

The consolation tournament, in which all those knocked out in the first round may compete, was won by Dudley and Pam Blodgett in a 6-4, 6-2 match against Jack and Rosanne Innes.

"Sometimes you think you'd almost like to see someone else win," said Kathy Hurley. She explained that she and her husband have talked about staying out of the tournament next year.

"Don't you dare! Just wait till next year," was Pinky Samoiloff's reaction when she heard the Hurleys might not enter the competition again.

"This (the finals) is the furthest we've ever gotten," said Samoiloff, her appetite whetted with a taste of near-victory. "Al and I are not always the most congenial couple on the court, but this year we did OK," she said. "I think that had a lot to do with (our getting this far)."

"Playing with your husband or wife isn't always the easiest thing. It's sort of an extension of yourself and you get so disgusted," said Samoiloff, adding, "temperament has a lot to do with it."

Just in case there's any trouble, though, the Winchester Tennis Assn. always is prepared.

"We have several lawyers in the tournament and several sitting by in case they're needed to file divorce papers," jokes Whit Gray, supervisor of the Packer Courts and (according to Neil Hurley) patron saint of Winchester tennis.

All but nine of this year's competitors were teams which had struggled for the E. Whitney Gray silver bowl many times before and managed somehow to stay married long enough to try again.

"The pressures are all for those people at the top," said Laurie Minnitti, chairman of the tournament committee.

The Samoiloffs must have felt plenty of pressure as they battled their way through a match against sixth-seeded Angela and Vito Sammarco and a match against fourth-seeded Katherine and Tom Dunn to reach the finals.

And although the Hurleys seem unbeatable, both said they are under a lot of pressure in the tourney.

"There are tough teams out there," said Neil Hurley. "We've never won it easily. It's always been a battle."

The Hurleys beat unseeded Chris and Bill Wolfe 6-0, 6-1 and then went on to take third-seeded Joan and Denis Byrne in the semi-finals.

According to most of the competitors, though, the scores are far from important once the party starts.

For the first time, the dinner was followed by live entertainment: rock and roll provided by Leo Lauretano, a local dentist and tennis player, and his band. "He had three or four people. They were awfully loud — they sounded like a dozen," said Samoiloff, laughing.

Part way through the evening, the band began playing ceremonial music, announcing the arrival of Prince Charles (a masked Ralph Bates, of course) draped in medals, Lady Diana (Roberta McNamara) and their wee tot, E.T. The two, who are not married and thus are unable to play in the tournament, have come to the party costumed in various wedding themes for the past three years.

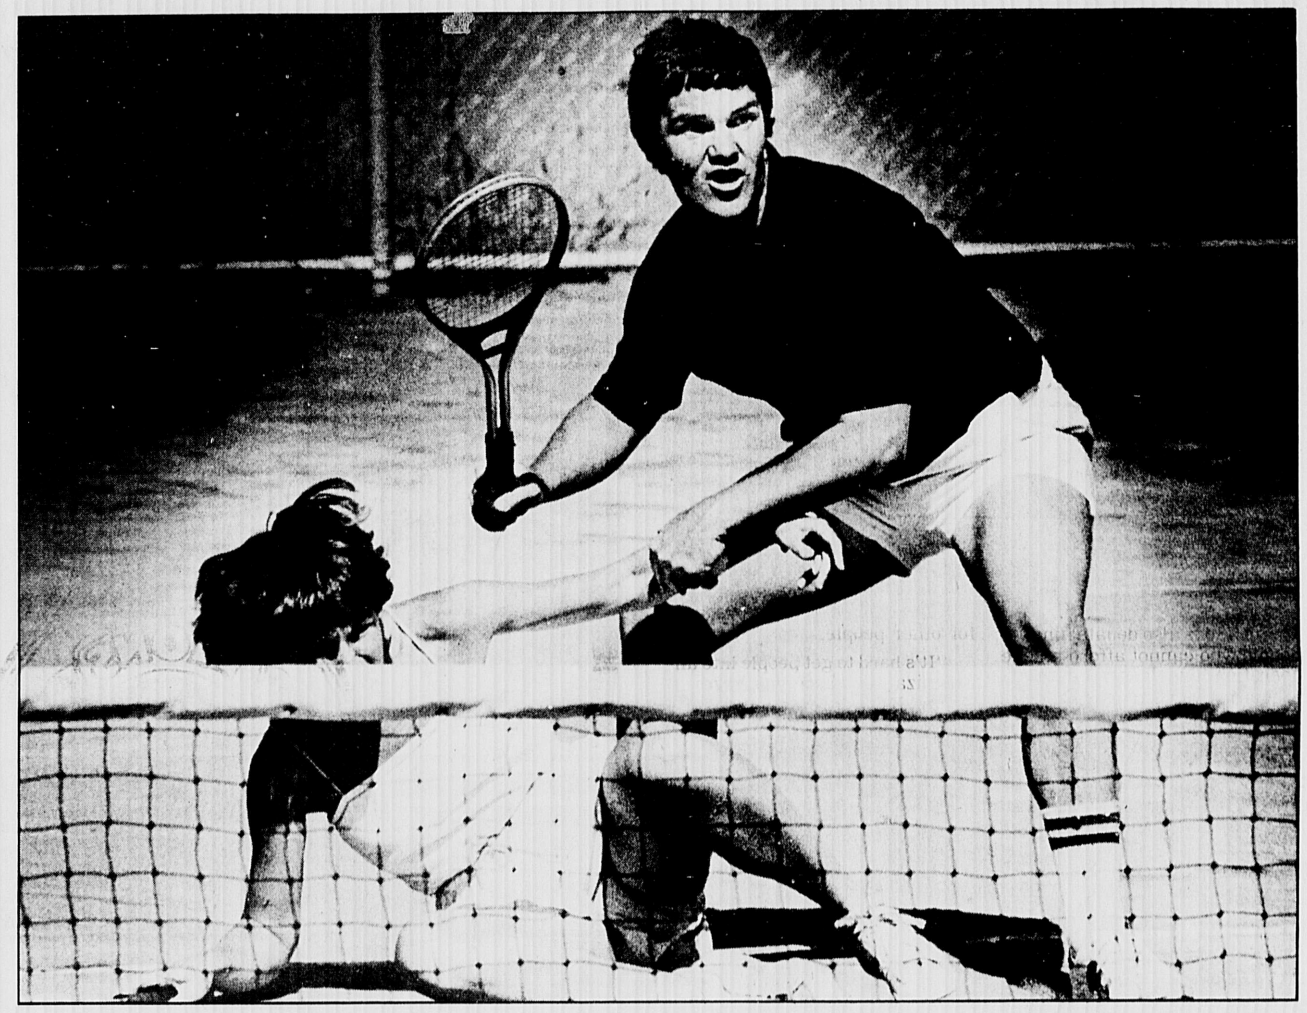
The tournament itself had a few laughs too — like when Al Samoiloff lost his cool during a set against the Sammarcos and flung his racket against the stone wall beside the tennis courts.

"That's a 350 dollar racket!" gasped the spectators — which just goes to show that in Winchester it's not the display of anger that's important, it's the money involved. (Samoiloff retrieved his racket and later could be seen surreptitiously examining it for any visible damage.)

None of the mistakes seemed to matter that much, though, because throughout the weekend there was one objective that kept popping up again and again.

"You want to make sure everyone has a good time so they'll come back," said Minnitti. "The tournament is mostly for the party."

Some things never change.



WINNERS — Neil (right) and Kathy Hurley were unbeatable in last weekend's annual husband-wife tennis tournament. The Hurleys were so good that even in this instance, when Kathy slipped, fell and was stepped on by her husband, Neil was able to give her a hand up and still return the next volley and win the set. The duo won their fifth straight E. Whitney Gray Tennis Bowl by defeating Pinky and Al Samoiloff in two sets, 6-3, 6-3 on Sunday afternoon.

Herlihy, Elio Picked For Tew Tennis Awards

Two awards were presented at the Twelfth Annual Breakup Dinner given to the Winchester High School boys and girls tennis teams at the home of Carmen and Elaine Elio, 21 Taft dr.

The awards committee of John Koslowski and Carmen Elio, assisted by the Winchester High School boys team coach Paul Atkinson and girls team coach Roseann Innes, selected the recipients from the players who participated on these squads.

The committee annually awards the Lelmen "Ken" Tew award and the Caroline Tew award to the boy and girl who, while representing Winchester High School, protray a willingness to perform in a manner that exemplifies team spirit and respect for the coach and fellow players.

These awards are presented by the committee in memory of Ken Tew, the tennis professional at the Winchester Indoor Tennis Center, and his wife, Caroline, who were killed together in a tragic accident in 1971. Both were very active with the youth programs at the Center and were an inspiration to young tennis devotees.

This year's Ken Tew award went to Winchester High School junior Mark Herlihy. The Caroline Tew Award was given to Teresa Elio, also a junior at Winchester High School.

By LIZ WILLEN

The 13-year-old Babe Ruth All-Stars won both games of a Somerville tournament, playing what coach Bob Nutile called "wild, wicked, unbelievable see-saw baseball." The team plays again Monday and has a chance to win the tourney.

Nutile, who was celebrating his sixth wedding anniversary on Saturday, spent the day biting his nails, pacing back and forth, and finally grinning in delight when his team pulled off an 11-10 victory against Revere. The team hadn't played ball for two weeks, so Nutile had a little more than usual to worry about on his anniversary.

"I've spent two out of three of my last wedding anniversaries on the baseball diamond," said Nutile, "But with this team, it's been worth it. It was a definite grudge match against Revere, and we really wanted to win it." The win brought the 13-year-olds record to 11-4.

Revere wanted to win just as much, especially since they'd been knocked out of the finals of the state tournament by Winchester last year. The two fine teams faced each other in the first game of the Somerville Silver Anniversary Invitational Tourney.

But it was Revere which showed its prowess early, scoring one run in the first inning and four runs in the second.

"It's tough to fall behind so early in a game," said Nutile. "But this team can hit. Even when we fall way behind, we never get too paranoid, because a couple of swings can put us right back in the game."

In the bottom of the third inning, with the score 5-1, Winchester got the strategic swings Nutile was waiting for. Dave Tucci led the inning off with a walk, Greg Wyse bunted and got on first base, and J.R. Morton, better known as "Moose," singled and drove in two runs.

But the swings didn't stop there. Pitcher Al Nasson doubled, driving in two more runs. Then Kenny Double laid down a perfect suicide squeeze, allowing Nasson to score. A total of five runs scored that inning left the 13-year-olds feeling a lot more comfortable, with a 6-5 lead.

In the bottom of the fourth inning, Winchester put the heat on again with a couple of strategic hits, after a rattled Revere pitcher walked three men in a row, the hits brought the score up to 11-5. A single by Morton brought in Tucci and David Colozzi, and a double by Andy Sexeny drove in two more runs. Sexeny himself came in when Frank Gianci grounded out.

By the sixth inning, Nutile thought pitcher Nasson might be getting tired. Revere was determined to get back on the boards again, and they scored four more runs, bringing the score to a dangerously close 11-9.

"I stayed with Nasson and he hung in there," said Nutile. "It got pretty hairy, though. After they scored the four runs, they had runners on second and third, and a Revere player smashed the hardest ball hit all day. Ken Double caught it in center field, but the team had their hearts in their throats."

In the top of the seventh, Revere gave Winchester another scare. Their lead-off batter singled, and after two outs they got two more singles, scoring a run and leaving runners on second and third.

Escape To Freedom

Czech Families Flee Home To Build New Lives

By ALISON McPHAIL

They disagreed with the government, but couldn't say so. If they gave the slightest hint to an official that they did not support the Communist regime, their lives and their careers would fall apart, their children's careers would amount to nothing, and anyone else associated with them would be in danger of being similarly persecuted.

For the Tkacik, Provaznik, and Kares families of Winchester, the only solution was to escape Czechoslovakia. After four years of waiting, they got their chance. The government finally issued them travel visas and they fled their country permanently to begin new lives as refugees in the United States.

No longer would they have to worry about what they said to the ir friends, family members or children. They could relax.

"If you fight against the government you will be imprisoned, so it is only the special people, the heroes, people who are committed to a life like that that stay," explained Katarina Tkacik of 85 Cross st.

For she, her husband and their 8-month-old daughter Katharina, and many others like them, the adjustment to America has been hard, but fortunately a little easier by groups and residents in Winchester and the Boston area, including the Winchester Rotary Club and Crawford Memorial United Methodist Church, and the Winchester Unitarian Church.

When leaving, each family had the option of asking for asylum in a number of countries. But as Karel Kares, of 6 Park rd., said, "the United States was the natural choice because it is the land of freedom."

Or as Gabriel Tkacik put it, "America is the ideological opposite of what we had. In Chechoslovakia you cannot grow professionally and your children cannot receive a good education unless you agree with the government and constantly show your support through participation in political activities."

'You must have freedom to talk in your social life and at work, and in Czechoslovakia you just don't have that freedom. You cannot trust anyone and you are always afraid. It is the worst feeling, like you are constantly degrading yourself.'

-Katarina Tkacik

Along with this, he said, there are also periodic examinataions at a person's job to determine his political attitude. If it is found to be unsatisfactory, three things can happen, according to Mr. Tkacik. That person will either be fired altogether, be demoted to a lesser position, or his opportunity for advancement will be stopped. In each case, an indelible mark would appear on the individual's record and the members of his family would also feel the affects of such action in their lives.

To avoid this pressure, both the Tkacik and Kares families left Czechoslovakia last summer after waiting about four years for the government to issue them travel visas. The Provazniks of 45 Tremont st. also had to wait about four years for a vacation visa from the government. They left four years ago and lived in New York prior to their arrival in Winchester two months ago.

But the wait was worth it, said Katarina Tkacik, because, "You must have the freedom to talk in your social life and at work, and in Czechoslovakia you just don't have that freedom. You cannot trust anyone and you are always afraid. It is the worst feeling, like you are continually degrading yourself."

Thus, with their visas in hand, both families traveled to Austria and were granted asylum for seven months. During this time, they chose an American volag, or sponsoring organization, and awaited interviews at the American Embassy to determine whether they were eligible for immigration to the U.S. According to Katarina, you must show proof of persecution.

She and her husband were both chemists in Czechoslovakia and eventually Mr. Tkacik lost his job. He now works for Millipore Corp. of Bedford and Mrs. Tkacik cares for Katharina at home.

Once they were given the OK, all that was left was to wait for the flight that would take them to the United States.

Departures are set according to immigrant quotas and these vary according to the waiting list at a certain time," explained Clare Purtell of the American Fund for Czechoslovak Refugees Inc., (AFCR) in Boston, the sponsor of all three families in Winchester.

She added, "Sometimes only one family arrives and other times a group between 15 and 20 can show up. It varies week to week, month to month."

For these families and others like them, leaving Czechoslovakia meant saying goodbye to friends and family for possibly 20 years.

"We cannot return because we will be imprisoned and since we have escaped it would be extremely difficult for another member of the family to obtain a travel permit," explained Katarina Tkacik. "Only retired people are allowed to leave because then the government won't have to pay to support them. Still, many of these people are too old to make such a move and they decide to remain."

For the Provazniks, to return now would mean facing a lawsuit charging them with kidnapping their 10-year-old-daughter Klara. "It seems funny, but the government is very serious since it feels Klara was taken outside of Czechoslovakia without a choice," explained her mother Yana.

Even with American citizenship all three families feel unsure of the safety of a return trip in five or six years.

Along with leaving friends and relatives behind, few families can bring more than a few suitcases full of vacation clothing. As Mrs. Tkacik explained, "To bring coats or boots or anything other than summer vacation wear would have looked very suspicious." She and her husband arrived with some luggage and a baby carriage carrying their daughter Katharina who was born in Austria.

Until they made friends and were able to find their home in Winchester, the Tkaciks lived in a mouse-and cockroach-ridden apartment in East Boston provided for them by their sponsor.

"Most refugees are placed in apartments in Roslindale, Brighton and Lowell, but the vacancies are very low and it is a very difficult job," said Purtell.

Similarly the Kares family of Karel, Lydia, 11-year-old Daniela and 13-year-old Michal were placed in an apartment in Allston for three months until Mr. Kares obtained a job as a surveyor in Boston and was able to move his famiy to Winchester. "We want the best for our children and the level of education is much better here than in Allston," he said. Over the summer both his children have been able to attend the Winchester Summer School Program with the help of program director John Pirani.

The AFCR office in Boston is a branch office of the main office in New York. At this time there are seven people on the staff to handle all the refugees who arrive in Boston affiliated with the program according to Purtell. Of these seven, three speak Czech. "We are in the process of looking for more help," she said.

Fortunately for Mr. Kares, he was able to meet some friends (who gave him some job advice) at the Masaryck Club of Boston.

The organization is named after Thomas G. Masaryk, the founder and first president of independent Czechoslovakia. Its purpose, according to President Laos Zeman of 10 Marchant rd., is to maintain a cultural

CIVIL WAR Unit looking for members: The 5th Massachusetts Battery is made up of people in the Greater Boston area interested in the Civil War. There are two divisions: (1) competition shooting divisions which is a North-South Skirmish Association unit that competes in team matches with a full-sized muzzleloading cannon as well as with muskets, carbines and revolvers of the pre-1865 era. And (2) the "chowder and marching division" which takes part in parades, battle re-enactments, and authentic living history demonstrations. You can join either or both depending on your interests. The musket and carbine shooting events involve team shooting at breakable targets with the shortest elapsed time determining the winning team. It's fun if you're interested in black powder shooting. For further information contact 5th Mass. Battery, John Humphrey, 195 West st., Reading, or Al Goscinak, 27 Washington st., Charlestown, by phone or mail. 3.19TF

ADJUSTED SALES PRICE

If you sell your home and do not buy or build another for as much or more, Uncle Sam will expect you to pay a capital gains tax on the profit from the sale. Fortunately, Uncle allows you to add a lot of dollars to the original cost of the home in order for you to reduce the final profit. The final result is known as the adjusted sales price.

Over and above the original cost of your home, you can add to the cost any additions or improvements made to the property while you owned it. This includes anything of relative permanency, such as: room additions, patios, fencing, siding, new roof, flooring, swimming pool, etc.

Then, after the home is sold, you can subtract from the sales price all expenses incurred in fixing up the property in anticipation of the sale, as long as it is actually paid for within 30 days after the sale.

Also, expenses associated with selling the home, such as: Realtor's commission, legal fees, appraisal fees and other associated costs may be subtracted from the selling price.

Ed's Genoise Orange Loaf

(Note: it is best to allow 3 to 4 days depending on your time to make this cake.)

Genoise Batter:

12 x 16 sheet pan buttered and floured
6 tbsp. butter melted to a light brown and cooled
1 cup all purpose flour or cake flour sifted
5 large eggs
¾ cup sugar
2 tbsp. vanilla
grated rind of one lemon

Place eggs and sugar in 3 to 3½ qt. mixing bowl. Place this bowl into another bowl containing hot tap water and beat for 10 to 15 minutes until triple or quadruple in volume adding lemon rind and vanilla while beating. Add flour and butter alternately in three or four steps, folding in quickly but carefully so volume loss is kept to a minimum. Pour into sheet pan and spread evenly with spatula. Bake in a 350° oven for approximately 15 minutes. Turn cake onto rack, cool, cut into four 4 x 12 squares (layers). (If you are going to continue cake another day, wrap each piece well and freeze.)

Butter Cream Filling:

Combine 9 tbsp. sugar and ¼ cup of water in a saucepan and cook to soft ball stage. In a separate bowl beat 5 egg yolks, continuing to beat and slowly add the syrup. Beat until cool, still beating mixture add ½ cup unsalted butter (softened). Refrigerate until ready to use. Bring to room temperature before using.

Simple Syrup:

Combine ½ cup sugar and 1 cup water in saucepan and boil until sugar is dissolved and syrup clear. Allow to cool and add orange flavor liquor, to taste. Refrigerate.

Candied Orange Peel:

Peel four large oranges in strips with potato peeler removing any white pith which clings to slices. Place in a saucepan and cover with water and bring to boil. Cook until translucent and soft. Cool. Cut into pieces the size of a paper match stick. In same saucepan combine 1 cup of sugar, ½ cup water, 2 tbsp. corn syrup and orange strips. Slowly bring to a boil and boil until it registers 230° on a candy thermometer. Drain and allow to cool. Sprinkle with granulated sugar and toss until well coated. Refrigerate until ready to use.

Orange Glaze:

In a sauce pan place 1 cup fresh squeezed orange juice, and 1 cup sugar. Bring to a boil. Add 1 tbsp. corn starch and boil until clear. Remove from heat, cool and store in refrigerator.

Believe it or not you are now ready to assemble your cake.

Assemble all refrigerated and frozen segments and bring to room temperature. Place one layer of cake on prepared surface (remember it has to be transferred to the refrigerater after it is completed. Brush with Simple Syrup, and spread with Butter Cream, place next layer on top and repeat two steps until you have used all the layers. Coat entire cake with Orange Glaze. Cover top and sides of cake with Candied Orange Peel, but not the ends of the cake. Place in refrigerator and allow to ripen for 12 hours. Serve at cool room temperature. Will serve 8 to 12 people.

★ All-Stars

"We were nervous," Nutile admitted. "And the next two guys they had at bat were good hitters who'd been aggravating us since last summer."

Luckily for Winchester, the hair-raising moment was short lived. Revere's next batter hit a ground ball between first and second base, and Greg Wyse threw him out to end the game with an 11-10 victory for Winchester.

Monday night's win against Somerville was "no box of chocolates, either," according to Nutile. The team hadn't played Somerville before, and didn't know what to expect. But they didn't expect that the game would be every bit as nerve-racking as Saturday's game against Revere.

The game started out well for Winchester. Colozzi and Nasson both singled, and Colozzi scored on a double by Sexeny, all in the first inning.

In the third inning, Morton got on first on an error, Nasson doubled, scoring Morton, and Sexeny got to first on an error, scoring Nasson. As they approached the fourth inning, Winchester was ahead 3-0, McElhinney was "loose and throwing great," according to Nutile, and the team wasn't too worried about a threat from Somerville.

They felt even more comfortable after the fourth inning, when a single by Wyse knocked in Capodanno, who'd reached first on a bunt and went to second when David Colozzi walked.

It wasn't until the sixth inning that Nutile began biting his nails. Somerville got two runs on three hits and four stolen bases. Then, in the top of the seventh, Somerville threatened again with two more hits and three stolen bases. When a batter was hit by a pitch, they were able to score again.

In the bottom of the last inning, Winchester faced a 4-4 tie. Never quitters, they faced their last chance with confidence, knowing that they had the middle of their batting order coming up. "Those mooses can end the game with one swing," said Nutile.

And the "Moose" himself, J.R. Morton, led the inning off with a double that hit the fence instead of clearing it. The next man up, Al Nasson, walked, and Andy Sexeny hit a ground ball to the third baseman, who went after Morton at third. Realizing he had no play, the third basemen tried to get Sexeny at first, but threw the ball into the bleachers, allowing Morton to score.

"Everyone breathed some sigh of relief," said Nutile.

awareness among Czechoslovakian people in the area through lectures, concerts, dances and picnics.

But because of the dramatically increased number of Czechoslovakian immigrants during the last few years, the club members have ended up doing more than merely providing moral and spiritual encouragement to arriving refugees.

Its volunteer members, along with many concerned Winchester residents, have greatly aided many families with apartments, furnishings and, most importantly, jobs. "Your heart goes out to these people," said Dr. Miriam Marecek-Zeman. She was a Czech refugee at the age of 8 and is now an educational consultant and professor of education at Wheelock College in Boston.

Her involvement began a year ago last February when she heard of a refugee family with 2-year-old and 4-year-old children living without heat and hot water, in East Boston. "Conditions were so bad for them here that they eventually returned to their Austrian refugee camp. No one could be blind to a family in a state like that especially when it involves children," she said.

Since then, the Zemans have voluntarily helped numbers of families and received greater and greater support from friends and relatives who likewise want to help make the adjustment for refugees from Czechoslovakia a little easier.

"I've had so many wonderful people help find clothing and furniture and everything else for these families," said Dr. Marecek-Zeman. "I couldn't have done it without them."

One major contributor she cited was the Winchester Rotary Club. A month ago, some of its members went through the Boston area delivering a large truckload of donated clothing, games, beds, rugs, chairs, lamps, radios, and curtain rods to various refugee homes.

"It took three minutes to explain the need of these people to the board of directors and one second for everyone to say 'Yes' to the contribution," recalled spokesman Dr. J. D. Murray of 10 Converse pl. "We delivered everything from soup to nuts and although we haven't received any additional calls, I'm sure we'd do it again if asked."

Murray said that the Rotary Club had been involved in similar donations in the past for Vietnamese and Cambodian refugees. "It seems to be the contemporary need," he said.

But clothing and furniture, as hard as they are to locate and as much as they are appreciated, are the easy tasks when compared to the employment problems faced by many refugees.

"The hardest part is in finding what expertise each person has," said Dr. Marecek-Zeman. "Things have gotten so bad in Czechoslovakia that it is no longer just the very educated and professional people that are escaping. Even truck drivers who can make a very good living in a Communist country are leaving."

Purtell Agreed that finding jobs is one of the most difficult tasks of a sponsor and she pointed out another reason why. "Most of the refugees that arrive can't speak very good English and without that, they cannot even interview for jobs."

Fortunately for the children of Czechoslovakian refugees in the Boston area, a bilingual program will be beginning in September at the Hennigen School in Boston.

It is the first of its kind and is a direct result of efforts begun by Dr. Marecek-Zeman last January. "We just hired two teachers at the end of June and they will serve about 65 children," she said.

But their parents are not so lucky.

While staying in Boston, many couples enroll in English as a Second Language courses provided by such organizations as the International Institute in Boston on Commonwealth ave.

But without the day care they were used to receiving in Czechoslovakia and the time commitment that goes hand in hand with a job, many find it hard to attend such courses. And, says Dr. Laos Zeman, "The free programs are not always good programs and a good program is often too expensive."

Said one resident involved in the local effort to employ refugees, "We try to place them in jobs around town through referrals and personal contacts, but they receive mostly cleaning positions since most of the refugees we encounter have yet to acquire a working knowledge of English." She explained, "some are taking courses, but most just don't have the time or they have young children that they can't afford leave at home."

For Karel Kares and his wife Lydia, the move from Boston to Winchester has meant studying English on their own. "It is very difficult not knowing the language well, but even in my country beginnings are difficult," he said optimistically. "I am very happy to have a job, and I can't expect to be at the same level as other Americans because we have only been here a short time." He and his family have lived in town since July 1.

As soon as he feels more comfortable with his English, he hopes to obtain a job as a building contractor like the one he had in Czechoslovakia. Mrs. Provaznik worked as a clerk in Czechoslovakia but now stays at home to take care of her children and is trying to improve her English.

For the Provazniks, adjusting to Winchester has not been as difficult as they previously lived in New York for four years. Ladislav was a successful theater stage designer in Czechoslovakia, but, as he said, "You reach a certain level of popularity and you have to decide whether you will go with the government or not. It is looked upon as the highest of compliments if you are asked to join up and so it is insulting if you refuse. Your life would be made very difficult and your children would not be able to receive a good education if you did. For this reason, many people decide to go with the government solely for the sake of their children."

He previously worked as an architect in New York and is now involved with the interior design for hotel chains with Graham-Solano Ltd. of Woburn. Like Mrs. Kares, Mrs. Provasnik left her job as a costume designer in Czechoslovakia and now stays home to care for her daughter and work on her English.

Another major source of help for local refugees has come from the Crawford Memorial United Methodist Church on 34 Dix st.

Having been a personal friend of the Zemans, Pam Purdy of 30 Dix st. first got involved when she heard that refugees were taking kitchen utensils off the planes on which they were arriving. "I went to the Evening Circle group for help in collecting kitchen utensils for these people as a church missional project," she said.

"We thought it was a one-shot deal, but Christmas time came around and the Masaryck Club was planning to use the church for the second time for a Christmas dinner. So I went to the Missions and Social Concerns Commission for money to buy gifts for the children of 12 families and to sponsor a St. Nicholas Party."

She then went on to describe an event that took place at the party and which gave the church even more inspiration to continue its work.

"A young boy's name was called to come up and receive his gift from St. Nick and at that moment a woman ran up crying to the boy, who was her son, and wouldn't let him move. It was later explained to me that she was telling him that the gift couldn't possibly be for him since she couldn't afford it. At that point I went up to the woman, put my arms around her and explained that everything was OK and the gift was for him. It was a very moving experience. They are just overwhelmed."

Since then, parishioners and friends of Purdy have continued to help refugees with collecting clothing and furniture and occasionally providing day care so that parents can leave their children and attend school or work.

According to June Cannon of 7 Meadowcroft rd., there are over 300 refugee families from Czechoslovakia now living in the Boston area. As a result, the Missions and Social Concerns Commission, of which she is chairman, is in the process of enlarging its mission project.

"We latched on to the cause as a mission project as soon as we saw how anxious these people were to help themselves," she said.

To continue helping such families, the church placed a notice in its newsletter last spring asking people to donate anything they might find while cleaning their houses during the summer months. "We're generally just trying to collect household items," said Cannon. But she added that the church would also like to sponsor some type of English tutoring program and is presently planning a money-raising project for the fall so that they can offer another Czechoslovakian Christmas dinner around Dec. 6.

The Winchester UnitarianChurch of 478 Main st. has also been very helpful in supplying needed household items for Czechoslovakian refugees.

"The church became involved after we heard about the plight of these people last December," said church secretary Betsy Ewing of 195 Cambridge st. "I run occasional notices in the church newsletter asking for donations and plan on doing so again this year."

Aside from the basic things like sheets, towels, blankets, bowls, cooking utensils, and mugs, Ewing feels that what these refugees also need very badly is a place to store what is collected by the church.

"Their homes are so crowded in Boston, and the church doesn't have any room, so I end up having to return so many things that are sent in," she explained. "It would be great if somebody had half a barn or something like that that we could use."

But the donations are always appreciated and according to Dr. Marecek-Zeman beds and dressers are right up there with jobs as far as immediate necessities.

As far as the Tkaciks are concerned, 90 percent of their good fortune has come from this kind of volunteer help from people in town. "We're really surprised by people's friendliness. European propaganda makes Americans look so rushed, like they don't have time to say hello or smile, but we find that people are really very relaxed. The lifestyle is not easy, but people are more friendly than we ever expected."

Similarly, Karel Kares said, "People have been so helpful with furniture and especially advice. They are very patient and friendly whereas the people in Czechoslovakia are very nervous." He added, like the Tkaciks, that propaganda in Czechoslovakia depicts "everything in America is bad," and unlike they have found things here themselves.

Said Dr. Maraecek-Zeman, "They are constantly overwhelmed by people's kindness. It's a completely new lesson of democracy for them."

And the adjustments, however difficult, are faced optimistically. "It's a challenging experience," said Ladislav Provaznik. "Naturally you feel homesick and lonely at times, but there's so many things to reach and learn that there really isn't much time to dwell on these feelings."

For these families in town and the others in the area, the waiting is finally over. They may be separated from their relatives, struggling with a new language, customs, and ways of thinking, but the difficulties are worth it, because, as Karel Kares says, "Here in America you are absolutely free."

Home Business Moves Into High-Tech Age

By DAVE LEECO

Six years ago, a 14-year old Winchester whiz-kid started a computer graphics company in the basement of his Winchester home with a $10,000 computer.

He found a market pretty quickly through his father, who works in a nearby high-tech firm. Soon the teenager's company was working for RCA, General Motors, Digital, the University of California and Colgate-Palmolive.

A year ago, when the company landed a contract with one of the larger Boston banks, the son and his father incorporated and moved to a Woburn industrial park. Next year, the father predicts the company will do $1 million worth of business.

A great American success story, right?

For the father and son, yes. For the computer industry, it's just another example of how small, inexpensive computers are revolutionizing the way business is done in America. For the town of Winchester, it's a story of record-keeping headaches, lost tax money and bent, if not broken, zoning laws.

The true story of the computer company is a fairly old story — many residents can tell stories of neighbors who ran businesses out of their homes, of a man who cut hair, and of the West Side woman who is reputed to run a high-class dress boutique out of her living room. In fact, 16 years ago the father in the computer story manufactured ice cream machines in the basement of his first Winchester home, before moving to the family's present home in one of the town's upper-scale neighborhoods.

But the advent of computers, especially home computers, is also the advent of a new era in home businesses. With a computer costing as little as $2,000, anyone with a little bit of knowledge can run a bookkeeping company, an engineering firm or a computer software company from his den.

Ads for computers in Personal Computer magazine stress the business uses of home computers. One for ComputerLand, which has offices in Boston and Worcester, reads that computers will provide "better ways to run a home, or run a business from it."

"I think many people are using small personal computers in their homes to run a small bookkeeping company or print mailing lists, that kind of thing," said Alicia Leclaire, who sells those people the computers at the Digital Computer Store in Boston. Such an operation could be set up with a $4,000 to $6,000 computer, she said.

Town officials and citizens feel such operations are being set up in town. But the town has never been able to track down most home businesses, unless the owners come to the town to tell it they are in business.

The town has never discovered that the teenager's computer company in the success story exists, even though it's been around for six years, and even though The Star found it in the Yellow Pages under "Computer."

The only means the town has for finding a business in a home is if the owner files with the Town Clerk. The only other way is a house-to-house search, according to one man who specializes in making sure towns get their share of the "personal property" (taxable business equipment).

In some ways, the search might be worth it. Most business equipment in the home is taxable, although the specialist argued that the cost of a search might equal the money gained in taxes. And if the town is in a strong law enforcement mood, the search would probably uncover quite a few home businesses violating the zoning laws.

For example, the town could have collected about $250 a year, by the current tax rate, on the success-story company's original color computer, and more on any equipment added later.

As far as zoning goes, the computer company was in the clear at first, although it should have filed with the Town Clerk's office. Because it was a family business that didn't disturb the neighbors and had no walk-in trade, it fit the zoning by-law.

Later, however, when the company hired a non family member as a technician, the zoning laws were broken. The technician and some of the company's operations are still done out of the home's basement.

In most cases, though, the town zoning administrator has little interest in home businesses — most are legal and do not need any town approval.

The Board of Assessors, however, does have an interest, as computers have also woven money through the old tale of home businesses. The $250 tax on the success-story company's computer might not seem a lot, until taking a look at last year's personal property tax receipts.

The town will collect about $30,000 from

Group Builds New Church In Mystic School

By DAVE LEECO

Outside the former Mystic School Friday, the pastor and staff minister of the First Faith Ministries church were trimming the hedges of their new church building, while another parishioner raked the leaves and a rented chipper ground up dead limbs from the maples surrounding the school.

The church members were getting ready to turn the former elementary school into their house of worship and a school for their children.

"We're very excited about having this building," said Jonathan DelTurco, the pastor of the Faith Fellowship Ministries of New England Inc., the 21-month old non-denominational Christian church which leased the Mystic School for five years. "It suits our needs tremendously."

The young church needs the school building for two reasons. First, the parishioners want their own church — over the last two years, they have been meeting in the chapel of the First Armenian Church in Belmont. Second, they want to start their own school — an elementary school at first, although DelTurco hopes to eventually have children of all grades enrolled.

"But this is a church first, a school second," noted DelTurco. "The school is very important to us, but we are here to have a home for our church."

The Faith Fellowship Ministries of New England Inc., which is affiliated with the International Convention of Faith Christian Ministries of Tulsa, Okla., began 21 months ago, said DelTurco, when he, his wife and three friends started meeting as a bible study group.

"We were meeting once a week in Watertown, talking about the Bible and what it meant to us," he said. "From there it just grew, and we decided we wanted to start a church."

The group began renting the Armenian Church in Belmont, and in less than two years the group of five had grown to a congregation of 200, with 90 families coming from all around the Boston area — Hingham, Dorchester, Roslindale, Jamaica Plain, and Cambridge.

DelTurco, who studies the Bible and theology in college, whose father is a minister and who hosts a religious radio program on Saturdays at 11:30 a.m. on WEZE (AM 1260), leads the congregation in a 2½ hour services twice a week.

"Our worship is very charismatic and pentacostal in nature," explained DelTurco. "We enjoy singing, clapping hands, getting very excited about the lord. We think he's worth getting excited about.

"Our message is that God is a good god — people see him as a mean old person ready to zap us, but we like to say that he is a benevolent person," said DelTurco. "We help people to know that the Bible is a book that can instruct us and be very helpful to us. It says you can walk in victory, live a full life on earth, without waiting to get to heaven."

SCHOOL SPRUCE-UP — Before moving their church into the former Mystic School, the Faith Fellowship Ministries' pastor, Jonathan DelTurco (r), and staff minister, Earl Darlington, trimmed the hedges around the building.

DelTurco said that nearly all the 200 church members attend the Sunday services, with about 100 coming to the Wednesday evening worship.

"Our church is very international — we have blacks, whites, Puerto Ricans, a good mixture," said DelTurco. "It's good to look across the congregation and see all those faces of different colors."

The church also stresses Christian education, noted DelTurco, holding "Little Folks Fellowship" classes for 3 to 12-year-olds and a nursery school for younger children. There is also an adult Bible class, the Victory Bible Training Center, which in its first year is attracting 50 people.

The success of those classes led the church members to think of starting their own school, and with the move into the Mystic School, the idea will become reality.

The school, the Agape Christian Academy, will teach the Bible-based Abeka curriculum, developed in Pensacola, Fla., and used by 300,000 students across the country, according to principal Janet Meesa.

"It is an excellent program and has received excellent reviews from other pastors who have started this kind of school," said Meesa. "It stresses the basics — phonetics, reading, math, history and science. There are health units, and a reading and art curriculum.

"The kindergartners come out after a year with a 450-word reading level, which is really excellent," added Meesa. "I can't wait to start teaching it. I taught in public schools for six years, and as far as I can see, the children do learn more with this curriculum."

The children also learn about the Bible throughout the curriculum.

"One good thing about this curriculum is that God is incorporated in every subject," said Meesa. "The science course is called 'God's World,' and it talks about how God created different things. In one of the reading books there is a little story that says 'See the sun. God made the sun.' Even in the history books — it talks about Christopher Columbus as a born-again Christian, which they recently discovered after reading his papers."

"There is a lot of individual attention, small classes, and a traditional way of teaching," said DelTurco, adding that any children, not just those of church members, may attend the school. Meesa said there are now about 20 children enrolled, and school will open concurrently with the Winchester schools.

"The purpose of the school is to train the children and put them back into society where they can make a difference," DelTurco said. "They can go back to their neighborhoods, their friends, wherever they're from, and make a difference."

For now, the school will be for kindergarteners through fourth graders. Over the next three years, Meesa said, a pre-kindergarten, fifth and sixth grade will be added, and eventually the church members hope to teach through the high school grades.

Tuition for the half-day kindergarten will run about $750, he continued, and for

Future Of The Fields

By LIZ WILLEN

Thousands of amateur athletes depend on them, and thousands of cleats descend upon them.

It is no wonder the fields of Winchester are beginning to show signs of wear and tear.

"The pounding of cleats each spring when the snow melts makes the fields almost like concrete," said Ken Cereghino, Director of Winchester Recreation Dept. "And now there are bare spots and worn spots. After such a dry summer, everything has been burnt out. We need a turf management program."

It looks like Winchester may finally get such a program. Along with five others, Cereghino was recently appointed by selectmen to a new committee that will investigate Winchester's fields, tennis courts and basketball courts, and come up with suggestions for improvements.

Other committee members include Director of Public Works Dom Serrratore, former Park Commissioner Albie MacDonnel, Youth baseball and Softball Director Bill Morton, high school Athletic Director Bill Colella, and Dan Serieka.

Chairman of Selectmen Edward O'Connell noted in a recent selectmen's meeting that the town may have ignored preventive maintenance and let the playgrounds deteriorate because of budgetary difficulties.

"The town's priorities have been in other areas," said committee member Dan Serieka.

People Pour In To Give Blood

Diminishing Supply Stocked Up By Red Cross

Sixty-six "Good Neighbors" presented themselves at the Church Women United Community Blood Drive held at the Jenks Senior Center on Aug. 3. Fifty five units of blood were collected.

"Up from last year and on par with the first drive in 1981," reported Bob Gerrity of the Winchester Red Cross. "We appreciate the effort made by the Church Women United, ably led at this drive by Barbara Fickett. For three years their work has filled a big gap in our summer schedule of blood drives. We're off to a good start toward our goal for 1100 collected units of blood."

Presenting themselves as donors were the following people:

Hospital Family Floods In To Add To The Summer Supply

The Annual Summer Blood Drive held Aug. 1-2 at Winchester Hospital brought in 91 hospital employees and area residents who donated their time and their blood to the American Red Cross.

Hubert "Bud" LeFever, Volunteer Chairman of the Winchester Red Cross, expressed his pleasure with the results of the drive. "The excellent response from all segments of the hospital family is appreciated. Their willingness to give has become traditional and that means a lot when the blood supply starts to diminish during the summer."

Ann Pereira of the hospital's community relations department coordinated the drive with the Red Cross.

Donors were:

Dump Stickers Can Be Found At Town Hall And Dump

It's time for residents who use the transfer station to get new dump stickers from the Health Dept. But they won't necessarily have to go to Town Hall.

The Health Dept. will be selling the stickers at the transfer station on Saturday, Sept. 10, from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Tuesday, Sept. 13, from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. Weather permitting, that is.

The stickers will also be available at the Health Dept. office Mondays through Fridays from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The stickers, required for anyone who dumps trash at the Swanton st. transfer station, cost $4 and are valid for two years.

Moped, Motorcycle Drivers, Watch Out

BY LIZ WILLEN

Two weeks ago, a 14-year-old boy failed to stop his moped at an intersection and crashed into an approaching car. Besides breaking his wrist and damaging the car, the youth was breaking the law.

Police Chief John McHugh is concerned about the number of similar accidents this summer involving motorcycles, mopeds, mini-bikes and dirt bikes, especially among youths driving without a registration or license.

The large numbers of accidents involving motorcycles and other recreational vehicles has prompted McHugh to crack down on illegal operators.

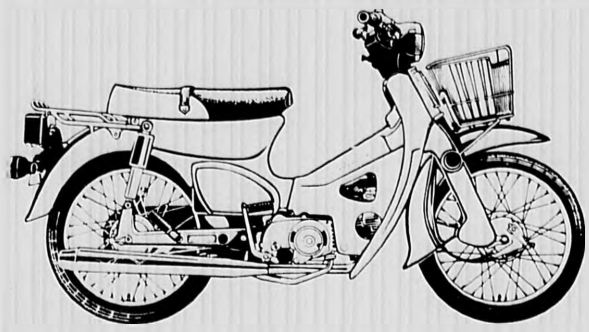
"Officers of this department will be especially watchful for illegal use of dangerous recreational vehicles," the chief warned,

"There is a big difference between these vehicles and the laws for operating them," he said. Motorcycles are designed for street use, where as mini-bikes and go-carts are not. Motorcyles require a valid motorcycle license, and a moped is a specially classed vehicle with its own special set of rules.

Although there have been several accidents involving motorcyles and dirt bikes this year, mopeds — driven on the street by under-age riders — are the polices' biggest worry.

"Parents often assume that mopeds are nothing more than motorized bicycles," said Police Safety Officer Kevin Mawn. "They don't realize how dangerous they can be when the rules are broken."

Many Winchester youths have broken these rules this summer, and Mawn reports three moped accidents in July alone .



There's been way too many accidents because these kids are too young to be driving mopeds.

— Officer Mawn

"There were probably a lot more than three," he said "The three reported were those serious enough to involve the police."

According to Mawn's reports, all of the accidents involved youths under the age of 16.

"There's been way too many accidents because these kids are too young to be driving mopeds," he said. "You have to be 16 to operate them, and you must have a learner's permit or a license.

"Their parents are condoning it because they buy them the mopeds in the first place," continued Mawn. "They must realize their responsibility."

Part of that responsibility, Mawn warned, is to see to it that youngsters don't operate their mopeds at a speed greater than 25 mph.

Aside from that, said Mawn, moped riders and their parents should know that while mopeds are allowed on streets, they cannot be taken on major highways. Hand signals must be used, no passengers are allowed if the learner's permit is restricted to mopeds only, and mopeds may not be operated before sunrise or after sunset, he added.

Parents must also assume liability in moped accidents involving youths under 18.

"A lot of parents don't realize that they are liable," said Mawn. "Last year, two 14-year-old girls collided with a car on their moped, and were seriously hurt. The parents were liable, and there could have been a great deal of damage to the automobile. As it was, the girls were seriously injured, and they were too young to be driving mopeds."

Chief McHugh is also concerned about the illegal use of mini-bikes, dirt-bikes and go-carts, which are not designed for street use. They may be used in parking lots or on private property if the owner gives permission, but no one in town is giving that permission, said Mawn.

"There is no longer any local place where it is allowed," Mawn said. "There used to be a place in North Reading, but it's not allowed there now either. And there is no way anyone in Winchester will give permission because of liability. If a kid is injured, whoever said they could ride would be liable."

Mawn said people who buy mini-bikes and go-carts usually own acres of land up north where riding is permitted on dirt trails.

Even if there is a place for the mini bikes and go-carts to travel, there are other laws which must be followed. The vehicles must be registered, have certain equipment, and may not be operated within 300 feet of a residence They may not be operated by anyone under the age of 14 without supervision from an adult The operator must wear a helmet

Many laws have also been broken by the operators of motorcycles in Winchester. Police report at least six accidents involving motorcycles since January.

A special license is required for motorcycle drivers, and helmet and eye protection must be worn Inspection, registration and insurance are required, the same as for an automobile.

Police are also aware that many large motorcycles used on the streets of Winchester are actually "trail bikes" designed only for off-street use. According to Chief McHugh, riding on the street with a trail bike (which usually doesn't have lights or directional signals) is both illegal and dangerous.

McHugh said he is concerned about the rights of legitimate motorists, homeowners and taxpayers who may be endangered or annoyed by the thoughtless acts of illegal operators.

Brush Fires Plague Fells Area

At least six brush fires reported in the last week have kept the Winchester Fire Dept. so busy that they've had to have an engine down from Woburn to help them.

"We've had a good half a dozen brush fires this week, and we really don't know why," said Fire Chief Robert McElhinney.

"It could be from youngsters starting campfires near the reservoir and other areas where there are open woods."

Fires have been reported in the Fells Reservation, Ridge st., Mayflower rd., Highland ave. and Bushcliff terr.

"Once the fires get started in these isolated areas they can really get going," said McElhinney. "And if they go into the roots, they kill the trees."

McElhinney expressed concern about the fires in the Fells area. "there are signs posted up all over," he said. "People shouldn't be up there in the first place, expecially with matches to start campfires."

McElhinney said both Stoneham and Medford Fire Depts. were fighting fires in the Fells area as well. "This weather doesn't help matters," he added. "We need several good hard days of rain."

Class time is spent learning and improving technique and skill. We are a "training" school with efforts directed toward the goal of giving our students a secure foundation in classical ballet technique while developing coordination, rhythm, poise and self discipline, which is so important to the beginning and intermediate student. We also give the individual guidance and attention to those students who wish to go on and pursue a career as a professional ballet dancer.

Highlands Housebreaker Held

Cooperation between Stoneham Police Dept. detectives and Winchester Police Lt. Joseph Perritano led to the arrest of 18-year-old Vincent Lena, of Derry, N.H., in connection with several break-in and vandalism incidents at Winchester Highlands homes.

The most recent incident, a hole was punched in the screen door of a Hillcrest pkwy. home, and a pane of glass was removed. The house was ransacked and littered with garbage.

Perritano made the link while investigating a different case in Stoneham.

"I was over at Stoneham trying to track down some stolen jewelry when I overheard a conversation about a break-in they'd had around the Fourth of July," said Perritano. "We had just had a break-in on Forest st. which is in that area.

Perritano asked for a copy of fingerprints the Stoneham Police had and checked the inked impressions with the ones he had on record from the break-ins on Forest st. and Hillcrest pkwy. The impressions matched perfectly.

"I obtained a warrant for Lena and signed a complaint for breaking and entering to wit larceny and willful and malicious destruction of property," Perritano said.

That same night, on Aug. 17, Perritano received a call from Insp. John Lecesse of Stoneham, informing him that he had Lena in custody. Perritano drove to Stoneham, picked up Lena and booked him in Winchester.

Lena was arraigned in Woburn District Court on Thursday, and held in lieu of $7,500 bail.

Scott Chosen Health Director

When the Winchester Board of Health was looking for a health director a year ago, acting health director Joanne Scott, the town's health inspector-agent, seemed like one logical choice.

But Scott felt she had to spend time with her year-old baby, and the Board of Health members felt they wanted someone with more experience. They chose Steven Weinstein, who resigned after 10 months.

Scott again filled in as acting director, eventually gaining as much tenure as an acting director, between her two stints, as Weinstein had as director.

When the Board of Health chose a new director last week, they again went with experience. By then, the person with the experience was Scott.

"She certainly knew the office," said Board of Health Chairman Jeanne Thomas. "She showed a sincere interest in doing the job, and I guess we all felt she was the best one we interviewed."

Scott showed more than a "sincere interest" in the job when interviewed by The Star. She showed real enthusiasm.

"I think this a really exciting time in the health field," she said. "The public is really aware of environmental issues. And public health is taking a new direction."

Traditionally, said Scott, health departments were concerned with inspections of homes and food establishments. Now, she continued, the emphasis is on health information and disease prevention.

"There is a lot of emphasis on child safety, lead paint screening, immunizations," she said. "We had our Town Day exhibit on child safey, and we'll probably do it again.

"We have a good many programs for the elderly, sponsored by the Jenks Center," she continued. "The immunization clinics, the keep-well clinics and the diabetes screening.

"The next thing to do is develop programs for the middle-age population, I suppose. We're looking into things like stress programs, hearing and sight screening, but we haven't decided quite what we're going to do yet," she said.

"The important thing is getting the public interested and involved in health," Scott said. "We're trying to give health information."

Besides educating citizens about health, Scott is educating herself. She holds a bachelor of science degree in biology, but is going for her master's degree in public health from Boston University. She is also getting ready to take the exam to become a certified health officer.

Hiring Scott may have ended the Board of Health's seemingly endless task of the past two years — finding a health director (the board has had three, not counting Scott, in that time).

But the board will still be interviewing applicants for awhile — with Scott moved up, the town now needs a health inspector-agent.

PAINTINGS PUBLISHED — Forty-one paintings of former Winchester resident Lee Winslow Court, including this 1980 work, "Logging," have been published in a book by the William A. Farnsworth Museum in Rockland, Maine. The book also includes a bibliography, and a list of Court's recognitions and collections. Court started his career studying with turn-of-the-century Winchester artist Hermann Dudley Murphy, and now has studios in Monhegan Island, Maine, and West Townshend, Vt., where he now resides. He is the father of local resident Pat Court Bonnell of Arlington st.

A Salute To Those Who Serve

Winchester Art Assn., In It's 51st Year Continues To Support The Visual Arts

By TOM HUNTINGTON

It is fairly easy to understand the needs that drive humans to seek out food, drink and shelter. There are some things that biological necessity forces us to obtain. But what causes men and women to create and enjoy art — painting, photography, sculpture? What possible value can such things hold for the human animal?

Man has been an artist almost as long as he has been man, dating from the time when the first primitive Rembrandt felt a need to document a hunt on his cave wall. Since then sociologists, psychologists and philosophers have been trying to understand the reasons behind the artistic impulse — with little success. All we know is that "You gotta have art."

Which is where the Winchester Art Assn. comes into the picture. The organization, composed of Winchester citizens (artists and non-artists alike) — works to encourage the enjoyment of the visual arts in the community. "The Winchester Art Assn. is a non-profit community organization whose purpose is to support and promote the visual arts as an important part of our culture," says Diane Pearson, the current president.

"Our membership, which is composed of both artists and patrons of the arts, sponsors lectures, demonstrations, trips to museums and galleries, and, through its picture-lending program, has donated a $2,000 scholarship to the Winchester Scholarship Committee."

Last November, the association celebrated its 50th anniversary with an art exhibit at the Winchester Town Hall. Members had their work on display, and competed for prizes awarded by three judges. It has been a fruitful half century for the group, which was founded in 1932, two years after the present town library was finished.

Originally the library contained an art gallery, but after the formation of the association, the paintings in the gallery were redistributed throughout the rest of the buildling and the room was converted to house meetings.

The association met there regularly until 1958, when the meeting place was converted into a reading room. Since then, the organization has met in the Edgar J. Rich room on the library's lower level.

"We have a meeting about once a month during the winter, so we have about six to eight during the year," Pearson says. "The first meeting this year is going to be a lecture about photography, and then we're going to have another one later about stage and set design." The first meeting is scheduled for Oct. 6 at the library.

In late November, the association plans to sponsor a trip to the Museum of Fine Arts to view the exhibit of American painters, followed by a dinner at the Museum's restaurant.

Other events slated for the upcoming season include a pot luck dinner at a member's home, the annual spring exhibit of members' work, and Town Day, when the group will hold its traditional all-day outdoor exhibit.

Nov. 4-6 will mark the annual indoor exhibit, held at Town Hall. For those who can't wait until fall, the Art Assn. is exhibiting at the Cooperative and Cambridgeport Banks in town.

In addition to events as these, the group has its annual picture-lending program. "The picture-lending program is our big fund-raiser," Pearson says. "There is a $20 a year fee for it. Everyone donates a piece of artwork, and three or four times during the year people can go to someone's home and choose one or two pieces of artwork that they can hang in their house for three or four months, at which time they return the paintings and choose some more. It's very, very successful."

This year the picture lending is scheduled to be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Macneill in late September, with those signed up returning the works they currently have the weekend before. Christine Loomis, the associations' publicity chairperson reports, "There is a large and varied selection of paintings to choose from in a wide range of media and style — traditional through abstract."

The money obtained through the picture-lending fees goes to a $2,000 scholarship given each year by the Winchester Art Assn. to the Winchester Scholarship Foundation. "We raise the money and give it to the scholarship foundation because we feel that there are so many artists who have children who are talented that it would make it difficult," says Pearson.

"It's much easier to give it to the foundation. We do have strings attached to the money. The winners have to go into art." And the money doesn't always go to one student.

"As a matter of fact, some of the money this year went to a graduating student and to two other students who reapplied and were already in college," says Pearson. "I was very happy about that."

Winchester Art Association officers: (front row, left to right) Mary Waters Jacobs, Corresponding Secretary, does portraits in pastels and will be working on a "Hall of Fame" series of portraits for a prominent Massachusetts college; Diane Pearson, President, is an art teacher in the Billerica schools and works in a variety of media with a concentration in design; and Joyce Colvario, Bank Exhibits Chairman, is experienced in the commercial art field but her first love is water colors; (Back row, left to right) Kathleen Indigaro, Member-At-Large, is a Language Arts Media Specialist in the Medford schools, past president of the Winchester Art Association, chairperson of the Winchester Arts Lottery Council and interested in water color and interior design; Christine Loomis, Publicity Chairman, works as a free-lance graphic artist and fabric designer and paints in watercolors and does pencil and pen-and-ink sketching; Susan Vrotsos, Program Director, works as a painter and sculptor, teaches students in her studio and is a gallery instructor at the Museum of Fine Arts; and Anita Stinson, Membership Chairman, is pursuing studies in art history at the Harvard Extension School with a particular interest in Oriental art. Missing from the photo are: Ann O'Connor, Recording Secretary, is an art teacher in the Malden schools and is interested in drawing; Nancy Watts, Picture Lending Chairman, is an oil painter and teaches art at The Bartlett School; Elaine Chipman, Member-At-Large, paints in oils and watercolors and is the past president of The Studio Guild of Winchester; Marie Seminatore, Hospitality Chairman, is a media specialist in the Burlington schools and paints in oils; Gloria Giello, Vice President, is an art director for a large advertising firm and paints in watercolors and acrylics; and Daniel Pearson, Treasurer, is a retired police officer and locksmith. (Photo by Amy Sweeney)

The current membership of the Winchester Art Assn. stands at about 90, including art teachers, commercial artists, photographers, people who paint only for pleasure and people who do not paint at all and simply enjoy viewing art works.

"We have some very well-known artists in the organization," Pearson says. "Carolyn Latanision, for example, is a watercolorist, and is probably one of the best watercolorists. Wherever she exhibits she always gets first prize. And we have Mary Jacobs, one of the finest portrait artists."

Although anyone is welcome to join, non-members are not only welcome but also encouraged to attend the meetings and lectures, which are announced in The Winchester Star.

While the Winchester Art Assn. has not discovered the reason why people need art, members have at least done their best to insure that the community is exposed to it.

"The Winchester Art Assn. believes there is a need for the opportunity of individual self expression and enjoyment through the arts," Chirstine Loomis reports. "It is the purpose of this association to help fulfill this need and to allow the achievements of artists to be shared by all, with the entire community as the ultimate beneficiary."

Climbers Learn About Ropes And Rocks At Project Go

LEARNING THE ROPES — As part of the Recreation Dept.'s Adventure Connection program for teens, a group of local youths signed up for "Adventure Week" got a chance to learn the fine points of rappelling, climbing and crossing on ropes at the Essex facility of Project Go. Above, Tedrick Potzka inches his way across a single line in a Tyrolean Traverse (in other words, crossing a rope bridge). Aaron Moore found a faster way to traverse with ropes, sliding along on a zip line at right, while Keith Leonard and Jim Whitehead watch from the security of ground level.

The Adventure Connection Ends Summer With Vineyard Trip

The Winchester Recreation Dept. recently completed its Adventure Connection program for students in grades 7 throu 12. The Adventure Connection offered variety and challenge. Through a new program each week with the hope of attracting Winchester youths who otherwise might spend their summer wasting away the hours each day.

The result was success, according to the department. This summer Winchester youths could choose from weeks as diverse as Fitness Week, a three-day hike in the Mt. Washington Valley, Saco River canoe trip, and Television Production I and II. Many youths took advantage of these programs and many who did kept coming back for more.

The Thursday trips included treks to Singing Beach, Good Harbor Beach, Canobie Lake Park, whale watching, and Martha's Vineyard.

The cost for each week or day trip was minimal — just enough to cover the costs of each activity.

Exposure and involvement are key words that explain what the program accomplished this summer. Students were exposed to things such as Nautilus weight training, roller skating, the Stone Zoo, the MDC pool, Winchester Raquetball, map and compass reading, the Fells, Jazzercise, the Woburn YMCA and parcourse, an acid rain presentation, and tv production all of these within Winchester or surrounding towns.

Summer is a time for fun, adventure, and excitement. The Recreation Dept 's Adventure Connection provided Winchester youths with all of these.

This fall and winter will also prove to be challenging and fun for all who are in grades 7 - 12. The Recreation Dept will be featuring many programs, such as junior jazzercise, drama workshop, self defense, box lacrosse, ski trips and more. Check the Fall-Winter Brochure for specific times and dates.

The 1984 Adventure Connection Program will begin the last week in June.

Canoers Head Down Saco

On Aug. 8, the Winchester Recreation Dept's Adventure Connection for Adolescent Youth left Manchester Field for Fryeburg, Maine. For three days, they camped and canoed along the Saco River.

The group canoed a total of eight miles Monday, and took time out for swimming before finally setting up camp. At night, they played charades and popped popcorn over an open fire.

On the second day, the group canoed a total of 10 miles with two stops for lunch and a swim, before a run through Walkers Rips. The second night's campsite was a quiet grove. After a few games and ghost stories, the group retired for the night. On the third day the group canoed four miles to the pull-out point, finally mastering the "J" stroke.

After the three days of camping and canoeing, the group headed back to Winchester.

Markey's Myopic View

Cong. Ed Markey held a district press meeting this week. He reported on his recent trip to Central America and presented his views on issues coming before Congress when it reconvenes in September. One issue is a bill sponsored by himself and Sen. Edward Kennedy which would prohibit the President from sending a single soldier to Central America without prior Congressional authority, except to evacuate endangered U.S. citizens.

Talking informally with some newspaper people while others were arriving, he commented that he'd like to hold future meetings to expand his press relations. That's commendable. He indicated it would be a good way of hearing our views as well as giving us a chance to hear him. That's a good idea, but we're not sure he really listens, or wants to.

We spoke up and gave him some feedback; so did Dave Brickman, publisher of The Medford Mercury and Malden News. Most of the reporters just took notes. Perhaps they thought it wasn't their place to tell the Congressman what they thought since it was his meeting and they hadn't heard him invite comment. Perhaps they could detect he wasn't listening to us, so why bother.

Even though he wasn't hearing, it's worth speaking up if he only gets the message that some people in his district disagree with him — not because they have less facts at hand, but because they see the world very differently.

Dave Brickman pointed out that Markey's views on El Salvador were very simplistic. He couldn't have been more correct. Even the way he presented them was simplistic.

Markey described his experience riding the streets of San Salvador, the capital city, in an armored van with two guards carrying Uzi submachine guns, as government sponsored "death squads" roamed among a populace just seething in frustration over poverty and human rights repression.

On the other hand, in Nicaragua, he was able to don his sneakers and running shorts and go out jogging without a care or fear. And there he detected a much different "spirit" among the people.

Nicaragua is ruled by the Sandinista dictatorship which overthrew the government by force in the name of a Communist-Marxist revolution. El Salvador has a democratically chosen government selected during internationally supervised elections despite armed interruptions by Communist insurgents. But somehow, in Markey's view, the Nicaraguans are the good guys with "a spirit" and the El Salvadorans are the repressive bad guys who need guns and armored vans.

The Nicaraguans will get around to elections as soon as their revolution is stabilized, he says. After all, we didn't have voting here until George Washington was elected in 1789, eight years after our revolution.

Markey said that his four days in Central America gave him "a feeling for things" after doing his reading and research at home, and "at least it's better than 95 percent of the Congressmen who've never been there and who will be voting on the same issues."

That may be true, but it is also easier to find quick confirmation of your conclusions if you've made up your mind in advance than it is to start with a clean slate in search of truth.

He says the root of the problems in El Salvador is "taxation without representation," which leads us to wonder why things are so much better under the Sandinista dictatorship in Nicaragua where there is no elected representation at all. Perhaps they have no taxes?

Markey feels the Reagan administration and Henry Kissinger, recently appointed to head the President's Advisory Commission on Central America, see every thing from an East vs. West viewpoint — the U. S. vs. the communists and their world domination theory.

However, we wonder why his own rose colored glasses can't see the Red in Nicaragua. Markey sees only U.S. involvement in a war unless there is an immediate negotiated settlement.

When you hear him reduce all the complex social,economic, and political issues of Central America to a contrast between "death squads roaming the streets" and "sneakers and running shorts" you get an overwhelming feeling that he holds a very fundamentally different view of what solution is in the long-range best interests of the United States.

No one wants war. Any war, large or small. How to prevent it can be debated up to a point. Some of us are certain there is at least one wrong way.

Those born before World War II look back and ask why we couldn't have seen that years of appeasement and negotiated settlements with potential aggressors virtually guaranteed that we would sooner or later be drawn into war. President Reagan knows a key lesson of this experience was that it is a much better course to draw distinct lines early than to continually back down until you are up against a wall and the only alternative is war.

By the way, Markey didn't mention that he actually saw any "death squads."

Woman Arrested In Fells Calls Experience 'Frightening'

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I am writing to inform the citizens of Winchester of an extremely frightening and unbelievable experience I had in the town.

On July 23, my female companion and I were arrested while jogging within the confines of the Winchester Reservoir. We were detained by Officer (Lawrence) Hill until a police car arrived to drive us to the station.

At the station, we were "booked." We then were told to remove our shoes and were placed in a small, dirty, smelly, locked cell. Here we waited for an hour for an officer of the court to arrive. We then had to pay $15 in cash for unrefundable bail.

Because I wanted to read the statement I was instructed to sign, I was told to return to the cell where I could read at my leisure! I had done nothing to provoke this harassment. The jail cell was so repulsive and anxiety-producing I hurriedly signed something. I was then told to appear at the Woburn District Court at 8:30 a.m. on Tuesday. If found guilty, I would be fined and have a criminal record.

My concern is this: Is justice being served if honest, taxpaying citizens are treated like criminals? Has 1984 arrived in Winchester? Granted, the Winchester Reservoir should be protected. Penalties should be levied against offenders. The police were doing their job. However, was this humiliating treatment of human beings appropriate punishment?

In my mind, the punishment does not fit the so-called crime. My friend and I are far from dangerous individuals. We are housewives with small children.

The sad part of the story is this: We were not the only ones arrested for trespassing. The police brought in 10 other people, including a young couple walking hand-in-hand. The Winchester Police treated all of us the same.

So beware, citizens of Winchester. One day, you too may be taken into custody and placed behind bars for being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

His many philanthropic acts have endeared him to not only Winchester citizens but to many others outside of this community. His friendly personality and his deep concern for people of all ages, especially for the seniors of Winchester will be long remembered.

The Council on Aging at this time extends its deepest sympathy to his beloved helpmate Evelyn M. Jenks who participated with him and continues in her deep interest in the welfare of the seniors of the community.

Be it resolved that a copy of this tribute be sent to Mrs. Evelyn M. Jenks, and that it be inscribed in the records of the Winchester Council on Aging on this date Aug. 23.

Walsh Family Thanks For Sympathy

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

The family of Gary M. Walsh extends their heartfelt thanks and gratitude to each and every one of the many people who offered their condolences and prayers after Gary's sudden death.

It is impossible to reach so many of you through the mail since addresses are unknown, and we hope that these words will reach you somehow.

Gary loved all the friends he had and would always try to help them in any way he could. So it was most reassuring and comforting to know that so many cared about him and share our loss. Gary will be missed — that is for sure — but we know that he would want the friends he left behind to always care about each other and help one another.

God bless all of you and may He keep you all safe from harm.

Most sincerely,
Mrs. Rita Walsh,
Patrick, Brian and Mary

You Can't Feed A Family On $58

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

Thank you for your nice pieces in our nice town paper. This one is about the piece in our Sunday paper about how much it costs to feed a family of four.

Whoever made out this budget didn't know what they were talking about.

Our president doesn't even know what he is talking about.

They say $58 to feed four people a week. Even if you go to the cheapest stores, it costs $25 per person. Of course, if you leave out paper towels, toilet paper, soap, soap powder etc. and etc., maybe you could get by cheaper. Of course, if you live on spaghetti or macaroni or rice, you could do it.

No wonder we have people with too much beef on them. This is how they live. A necessity.

If you are going to eat properly, you need the following per day:

Breakfast — cereal or egg, toast, juice of some kind, coffee or milk.

Lunch — sandwich of some kind, fruit, drink? milk.

Dinner — piece of meat (some kind), potato, green and yellow vegetable, fruit, milk.

I defy anyone to live on $58 with four children.

Sincerely,
Louise Chase

With Mrs. Brown Gone, Cat Lost

EDITOR OF THE STAR:

I should like to commend you for the help you have given Mrs. Yvonne Brown in attempting to raise money to care for lost and unwanted household pets. Hopefully, people will continue to contribute.

We have a victim of the circumstances which forced Mrs. Brown to give up the shelter. For about a month now a lovely, homeless cat has been wandering in our neighborhood.

Attempts to find her owner have failed although you were kind enough to allow us to advertise in your newspaper.

With fall almost here and winter not far behind, we are worried about the fate of this friendly and personable kitty. She is white with calico patches. She has been neutered and we have recently taken her to the vet for a checkup and shots. She is young and in fine physical condition. There is no doubt that she has been someone's pet for she is very responsive to attention - talks, flips over on her back to be petted, and runs to meet us.

If anyone can find a place in his or her home and heart for this little orphan, please contact us during the evening at either 729-8790 or 729-9465.

A Sleepy Memory Of A Lesson Learned

By TERRY MAROTTA

Events or places far-removed and near-forgotten emerge from the mists and take on sudden clarity.

Sometimes when sleep eludes me, my mind rows back to the past. Events or places far-removed and near-forgotten emerge from the mists and take on sudden clarity.

I see a wing chair in the booklined room where my grandfather sits, reading histories of the Civil War. He is always there in that chair, a man in his late 70s, and I am always approaching him to ask for some small thing — to have him bring out his penknife, for example, and scratch up the soles of my brand-new patent leather party shoes so that, in the flight of high spirits engendered by little-girl organdy and ruffled panties and these very shoes, I don't slip and come crashing to earth.

I see familiar landscapes too, a stand of birches, a clump of fern, or the way the snow used to look, piled like one fat marshmallow atop a certain birdbath out behind our house.

But last night I saw something new in its oldness, a thing neither remembered nor thought of in more than a quarter-century. I saw, clear as the letters on this page, a scene involving one Anne O'Rourke; involving what she said to me once, and how I answered her; involving the echoes born of that exchange, that reverberate down toward the present.

We weren't more than 7 or 8 then. We went to school together, she and I, to a convent school with boarders and day-students both, a place of polished marble and Palmer Method script and prayers in a chapel perpetually aflicker with candles.

Life was fraught with drama then. There were Episodes in the lunchline, Sagas played out in the schoolyard, Momentous Events enacted in the musty and cavernous locker rooms. Everything mattered, every event stood out, sharply etched into the still-soft clay of our experience.

We wore blue serge uniforms, with the starched linen collars and cuffs scratchy against our skin. We drank milk from small and shapely glass bottles midmorning, and blew bubbles into them when the sisters' backs were turned. We tiptoed past the library once, when an old nun was laid out in there, dressed in white amongst candlesticks and funeral wreaths. We thought about death and the eternal soul, and wondered what it must be like in that place that was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be.

And Feb. 14 approached us. We were to have the usual party in class, and we'd all be exchanging valentines. The flimsy store-bought kind seemed, to me, inadequate for this great occasion, and so, a week or more in advance, I began to make my own.

They were red, of course, and heart-shaped, cut with a wobbly hand from construction paper. Gobs of glue went into each one, holding layers of the red to many more layers of paper lace doilies in a series of hearts decreasing in size toward the center. In a final effort at a plush three-dimensional effect, a small strip of paper, folded accordion-fashion, connected the last layer of doily to one tiny ultimate heart, so that that heart would stand out, so that it would spring forth at the recipient, full of eager second-grade love.

I carted 25 of these thumbed and gooey creations into school on the great day. When the party started, we were allowed, each one, to act as our own letter carriers, delivering our prizes to each empty desk in a noisy simultaneous flurry.

I had just put one on Anne O'Rourke's desk, on the desk of my good friend Anne, and was moving along, when she looked over from several aisles away.

"Whose is that ugly thing"? she shouted in a voice made hearty with gleeful contempt.

"I don't know," I answered her, looking down at my sticky attempt, "but isn't it AWFUL"?!

When the crush of children carried her past, I turned and took it off her desk. She never mentioned it again. She hadn't seen me take it.

I went home that day, ashamed, with hot cheeks and a wounded spirit.

We moved away the following year. And Anne, and the marble floors, and the tokens of homely affection were swallowed together in the swirl of ensuing days.

It's funny that this episode should come back to me now. It comes unbidden, but with a fresh and surprising pain, like the sudden tang of thyme from a long-unopened spice chest. Why is that?

Because it was such young pain, the first rough refusal of my proffered love?

Maybe that's it. Or maybe it's because it feels unfinished to me. Maybe there's one more thing I have to say on the subject. This is directed to you, Anne, if you're out there: It was my valentine that you sneered at; I never should have denied it.

So I guess I did learn a lesson that day. I learned to keep my heart on a leash, and not on a spring. I learned not to leave it on any old desk.

And I learned another thing too: my real shame grew not from that child's thoughtlessness, but from my own lack of courage. I wouldn't own up to having made that poor misbegotten valentine. I was its mother, yet I called it an orphan.

I'll never do that again, I realize now.

Whatever comes from the heart has beauty all its own, however uncelebrated it is, however unacknowledged.

★ Fields

Serieka grew up playing on Winchester fields and has been involved in youth activities for years. "They thought the fields could wait, but there has been a continual deterioration. Winchester used to have the finest fields in the area."

While the fields, conditions have gone downhill, their usage has almost doubled. There are 1,500 Youth Soccer players who use the fields and close to that number in baseball and softball. Also, the large numbers of women and girls who are involved in athletics has put an additional strain on the fields.

And they show it. The baseball diamonds are so hard that some coaches have likened them to cement. The enjoyment of playing soccer on a grassy field has become nothing but a memory. The tennis courts need resurfacing and many of the fields need fill.

Coaches, committemen and the Park Department all agree that there are problems. Yet all realize that the vast amount of use the fields get cannot be stopped despite persistent efforts by the Park Dept.

"We began a program of resting the fields in 1980, but few people know about it," said Richard Tofuri, Grounds Supervisor of the Park Dept. "You'd need an armed guard to get people off those fields. There are just too many sports and programs on those fields and they need a rest."

Winchester High School's athletic director, Bill Colella, agreed with Tofuri. "The only way you can get those fields in tip-top condition is to stay off of them," he said. "The Park Dept. has done a good job by closing certain fields, and we're going to try and stay off the fields when there isn't an athletic group playing. You have to stay off them enough to reseed and water them so that they'll be in better shape."

Tofuri said that staying off the fields at certain times has only yielded fair results. There is still a tremendous amount of activity going on, and the town does not have the kind of sprinkler systems that can provide the fields with the water they need.

"We don't have the manpower and the equipment to water every field," he said. "Sprinkler systems are very expensive. Grass will come back if you fertilize it and water it, but there's too many kids using those fields now to fertilize."

Tofuri said that the Park Dept. has been cutting the fields and weeding them, and even hired a horticulture outfit to assist them this summer.

"We're doing out best," he said. "But sometimes it just feels like a losing battle. We don't have enough money, and even if we did, the fields would still get the traffic. I hope the new committee can do something."

Bill Morton, who will head the committee, also hopes they can accomplish some changes, although he insisted that it would be premature to make any concrete suggestions. "What we'd like to be able to do is to upgrade the playing conditions of the fields to be on a par with neighboring towns," he said.

One coach said that it was embarrassing to have those neighboring towns come to Winchester. "The field conditions are absolutely deplorable and they are getting worse," said Babe Ruth Coach Bob Nutile. "There isn't a field in town that doesn't need fill. I'd like to see those fields in presentable condition."

Nutile did praise the town for refurbishing McDonald Field. "It finally looks like an honest-to-God baseball field," he said. "But there are still broken bottles and a lot of kids get hurt."

Nutile recalled an incident that occurred two years ago when his team wanted to have a home game at West Side Field. "The town wouldn't help us besides lining the field," he said. "So we (coaches, players and parents) took it upon oursleves to fix the field. Would you believe we got a donation from the city of Medford?"

With a donation of six truckloads of clay, shovels, sickles and lawnmowers, Nutile, his team members and their parents fixed the field themselves.

"It finally looked like a baseball field again," Nutile laughed.

Director of Public Works Dom Serratore said that several fields are in need of immediate maintenance. "We have a good cross section of people on the committee and maybe now people will listen to us," he said.

Serratore said that he tried to get money from the town to improve the tennis and basketball courts at the Town Meeting last spring, but his request was denied. "Hopefully, the committee will be able to garner support for better maintenance," he said.

According to Serratore, the dry weather this summer had an adverse effect on the root system beneath the fields. "The ground is very dry and the increase in activity on the fields has raised havoc with them," he said.

"Everything has been burnt out this summer," said Cereghino. "In any type of rehabilitation we have, there must be water. The town uses a water cannon on the football field and on Manchester Field, but it's not enough. I don't think the town has addressed anything more than the minimum maintenance needs and I hope the new committee will draw all of this to their attention."

★ Computers

194 businesses paying personal property tax bills of under $500,000. That's only a small percentage of the $593,739 collected in personal property taxes last year — the bulk of it came from three businesses: Boston Gas, Boston Electric and New England Telephone.

None of those taxed smaller businesses were in the home. The majority of the personal property recorded on the assessor's list could be easily found — in the town's business buildings and in doctors' and dentists' offices.

Town Meeting member John Twomey was so upset at the loss of tax revenues, he complained to the selectmen last month. "Nothing is wrong with it (home businesses), but I want the town's cooperation in getting the personal property tax. The town should collect when someone has a computer," he said.

Figuring out how many people have a business computer in their home is a bureaucrat's nightmare, however.

Most people opening a business have to file with the Town Clerk's office under state law. But not everyone — if the person is doing business under his own name, or is incorporated, the town isn't required to know.

"I suspect that there are many who don't file (who are required to)," commented Town Clerk Carolyn Ward, who said she received 24 applications for home businesses this year and 50 in 1982.

Many may not file because "they are not aware that they are supposed to," added Ward, not because they are trying to hide. The father in the success story, in fact, wasn't aware of any filing requirement, since he felt the business fit the zoning laws.

State law doesn't require anyone else but the town clerk to know about a home business. But the town has set up its own system so that the Building Dept. and the Board of Assessors find out about anyone who notifies Ward they are doing business from their home.

Ward sends applicants down to the Building Dept., where they must fill out a home occupation form stating the nature of the business, who will work for the company, and if cars, customers or deliveries will come to the home.

"The trouble is, on a lot of businesses, we don't know about them," observed Building Commissioner and Zoning Administrator Anthony Zagzoug, who has a list of about 200 home businesses. "The only way we can check it is if they get certified with the Town Clerk, and many of them don't."

Zagzoug noted that most home businesses would be permitted under the zoning by-laws — the only ones specifically excluded are barber shops, beauty shops and mortuaries.

Only family members may work in home businesses, the business can't cause noise, vibration, glare, fumes, odors or electrical interference, and they can't generate any more traffic than normal for a residential neighborhood. Nor can products be sold directly from the home.

Finally, the zoning by-laws state that only 25 percent of the home can be used for business. In many of Winchester's older homes, noted Zagzoug, 25 percent translates into an extremely large, 4,000 square foot work area. "The Planning Board is looking into changing the rules, making them more stringent," he added. "In Arlington, they have a flat figure of 600 square feet, which would take care of the problem of those larger houses."

In the rare cases in which businesses don't fit the zoning by-law, the owners can ask for a variance from the Zoning Board of Appeals, Zagzoug noted. Otherwise, "I just stamp it approved."

Zagzoug's list of businesses then go to the Board of Assessors, which also gets a list from the state of any incorporated businesses, according to Assessor Chairman Werner Carlson.

"We're following up on these businesses, but we're limited to our investigation unless we hear about it," said Carlson. "And sometimes, it's costing us money if we don't hear about it."

Carlson estimated that the assessors don't hear about 10 to 20 percent of the home businesses in town. However, the town's personal property tax records show no home businesses other than doctors' offices, and none of the businesses on Zagzoug's list are on the tax rolls.

John France, the head of the Assessment Review Committee which recommended the town hire a full-time appraiser, said that person might be able to track down some of the home businesses and their taxable equipment.

"Certainly these three guys (the Board of Assessors), working part-time, don't have the time to go out and police that," said France. "I would certainly hope the assistant assessor/appraiser would, but that's going to be very much a function of how he can work in the office once we hire the guy."

The committee looking into hiring the assistant assessor has just begun its task, sending out the advertisements for the job one month ago.

But even once the assistant is hired, he would have to spend virtually all of his working hours looking for home businesses to find all of them.

Vincent Rasta is a consultant hired by cities and towns to track down personal property, a job he recently completed for the city of Cambridge. "For what the town will pick up in tax dollars," he said, "it might not be worth looking for the home businesses.

"It would involve going to each and every home and apartment, and ascertaining if the equipment there is used for a business," he said. "This is how you've got to do it."

The time to find home businesses, continued Rasta, "is when a revaluation is being done. Then, whoever is doing the real estate property could spot the computer in the house."

When Town Meeting voted to hire a professional assessor, members of the Assessment Review Committee pointed out that the hired assessor could do a regular revaluation of the town, to meet the state law requiring an assessment update every two years.

A full-time professional in the assessor's office, Review Committee member Jack Farrell estimated, could go through every house in town during a five-year period — then at least the records would be nearly up-to-date.

But Rasta noted that even if the professional spotted a computer in the house, it would be difficult for him to know what it is used for.

"If the person has a computer, you have to ascertain if it is used for business purposes," he continued. "If the guy's children use it 70 percent of the time for video games, you can't assess it for that, only for the percentage of time it is used for business."

Moreover, said Rasta, the person doing business home could only be taxed if he hasn't incorporated the business.

An individual owner (or a partnership, estate or trust) can be taxed for "everything he has in the office — furniture, file cabinets, typewriters, computers, calculators."

But an incorporated business can't be taxed for anything used in administration, purchasing or selling — in other words, the furniture, file cabinets, typewriters, computers or calculators.

A corporation is taxed only on machinery — and not even that if it has been given manufacturing status by the state Dept. of Corporations, Rasta said.

"It's not a cut and dried law," Rasta concluded.

Nor is the question of whether the town should try to find out who falls under the law.

The only certain thing is, with the prices of home computers dropping and the quality rising, home business isn't what it used to be.

And it never will be again.

★ Church

the first through fourth grade it will cost $1,250 per year. Tuition for additional children will be dropped 20 percent.

"We made the costs inexpensive on purpose, to help people afford a good education for their children," DelTurco noted.

Before the school starts up, the curriculum will be reviewed and approved by the Winchester school superintendent's office, which must approve all private school curricula in Winchester according to state law.

Besides working with the superintendent's office, church officials said they will work with the neighbors to make sure they are accepted by the community.

"We want to have a good relationship with the neighbors," said DelTurco. "If there are any problems, they should come to us. If the parking is a hassle, or the kids are noisy, they should come to us any time."

LONG-TIME ROCK HOUND — Eleanor Banks, the founder of the Winchester Mineral Club, has been a rock hound for years. Back in 1935, she dug out rose quartz from a mine site in Bethel, Maine, despite warnings from the land's North Carolina owner that trespassers would be prosecuted. But Banks recalls that for her and Emily MacPheirson (r), and scores of other rock hounds, nothing could stop their search for specimins.

'I remember being invited out to dinner one night. And while everyone else I was with went into the restaurant to eat, I wandered around outside and found some feldspar and mica in a nearby field.'

—Eleanor Banks

Mineral Maven

For 30 Years, Winchester's Eleanor Banks Has Sought And Taught Minerals

By LIZ WILLEN

Eleanor Banks has carved her name in stone in Winchester.

Ever since she began the Winchester Mineral Club almost 30 years ago, she has been leading residents on expeditions to Maine, New York and all over the state in search of Herkimer "diamonds," quartz formations and other unusual minerals.

She is also known as a fine singer at the Church of the Epiphany on Main st., an accomplished musician and cook, and a warm, caring human being with, appropriately enough, a "heart of gold."

But mostly, Banks (who is in her 70s but begs to keep her age a secret), is known for the patience and joy with which she has shared her vast knowledge of geology with Winchester youngsters.

After many years as a housekeeper to three different local families, Banks now lives alone among the mementos of her accomplishments as a collector, singer, geologist and teacher.

Her Palmer st. apartment is packed with crystal quartz formations, animal-shaped rocks and assorted gems and minerals that she's collected over the years, as well as stacks of books and memorabilia from the Mineral Club.

She doesn't mind showing off the small article written about her accomplishments in geology in a copy of Allyn and Bacon's text, "Exploring Life Sciences."

She will proudly display (and play) the wooden flute-like instrument her father sent her from her native Tennessee before he died. And she is happy to discuss her memories of the singing scholarship she won to Austria.

She has files of clippings, letters, invitations and diplomas sent to her by past Mineral Club members, many of whom first learned about geodes, gems and gneiss during Banks' once-a-month classes at the Winchester Public Library.

More than 20 of Banks' club members have gone on and received degrees in geology or related fields, and she treasures a packet of articles and a letter she has recently received from ex-student Henry Shaw.

"He just got all these articles published," she boasts. "I'm so proud of Henry. He's getting his doctorate in mineralogy from the University of California. He is one of the finest boys I've ever known."

Banks remembers many of her old students, although she is a little fuzzy about when the club actually started."It's such a wide story," she laughs. "And it was such a long time ago."!

One thing Banks is certain of is where her own interest in minerals developed. A native of

About Town

Two Selectmen Celebrate Birthdays

Selectmen bubbled over with Chairman Edward O'Connell's new plan last night to celebrate the 51st birthday of Selectman Michael Saraco.

"It isn't often that we have a chance to depart from the gravity of our daily matters," said O'Connell, who will celebrate his 56th birthday on Friday. "Bring on the champagne!"

Carolyn Shaw, the Town Manager's secretary, brought out five bottles of champagne to celebrate.

"Four years on this board and we just discovered we had the same birthday," Saraco said to O'Connell. "Geez, the things being revealed here tonight!"

O'Connell then revealed that he had a twin brother, and the board questioned him about a possible set up. "We've got to get the real Ed O'Connell back!" said Saraco. "How long have you been fooling us?"

A round of good-natured toasting and teasing followed, before selectmen went back to the evening's agenda.

"Am I glad we don't have a heavy agenda tonight," said Selectman Alan Macdonald, sipping his champagne. After several glasses were consumed, O'Connell remarked appropriately, "Thank you for your tolerance in allowing us to deviate from the norm."

Field training, attended by cadets normally between their second and third year of college, gives an opportunity to evaluate each student's potential as an officer, according to an Air Force spokesman.

The summer's curriculum consists of orientations on jet aircraft, career opportunities, human relations education and equal opportunity training. Physical fitness and survival training is also emphasized.

The field training is four weeks, but cadets in the two-year ROTC program receive an additional two weeks of instruction in the development of air power and the contemporary Air Force.

Groux is a student at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

★ Banks

Bristol, Tenn., she spent her summers singing at the von Trapp family summer camp in Stowe, Vt. It was there, while singing, that Banks was first rocked by minerals.

"While we were singing, Baroness Maria von Trapp suddenly called out to us from the nose of Mt. Mansfield," Banks recalls. "She had some beautiful smoky quartz in her hand, and I was puzzled by it."

Banks brought some of the quartz back with her to Winchester, where she was living at the time as a housekeeper. She took it with her to Winchester library, and the librarian there suggested that she take a course at Harvard Extension School in geology.

Later, friends Karl and Ruth Terzaghi arranged a scholarship for her to study at Harvard, and Banks spent the next three years taking courses in mineralogy, earth science and fossilization.

"At first, I had no idea what the outcome would be," she remembers. "I got a 45 on the first test and I was afraid they'd kick me out of class. But they said that was pretty good, and I really loved what I was studying."

Meanwhile, Banks kept making discoveries about minerals on her own. "I used to go up to Winchendon every week where a friend of mine had a mineral shop. She taught me the basics. She also taught me about gems and fossils, and I used to stay up all night memorizing what I had learned."

Banks recalls that her interest in minerals was all-consuming during those first few years. "I remember being invited out to dinner one night," she laughs. "And while everyone else I was with went into the restaurant to eat, I wandered around outside and found some felspar and mica in a nearby field. I couldn't care about eating when there was so much beauty to be discovered."

Finally, Banks decided to form a club to give Winchester children a hobby and share with them the joy she was constantly discovering in the earth.

The first members met at Banks' Agawam rd.. home. Ranging in age from 7 to 17, they began by collecting minerals and studying the history of the earth's formation. The club grew to over 60 members within the first few years.

"One child just told another," says Banks. "I never advertised. Before long, the club got so big that we had to begin meeting at Winchester Library."

The club still does meet at Winchester Library on the second Wednesday of each month. However, membership has gone way down in the past few years, and this year Banks had only six members in the club. This was also the first year that Banks did not accompany the group on any mineral-finding expeditions.

For the first time in the club's history, there was not enough interest among members to get a trip together.

"I can't figure it out," Banks says."All the parents used to come along, and we used to have as many as 16 cars going along. Now, we're lucky if we can get one. I guess the kids are too bogged down with sports."

Banks used to take students to Newley, Maine, to look for amethyst, to Rockport for granite, and to Groton to tour the Ruggles Mine. Parents would take their children out of school, and as many could fit would pile into Banks' station wagon, along with the cookies, crackers, gum, chicken and ginger ale that Banks packed in a great big box.

"I paid for all the gas, food and transportation with minerals that I sold,"Banks remembers. "I once went without a pair of shoes to pay for a trip. I just loved those trips."

Nancy Hugger, whose son is still a member of the club, also enjoyed the two trips she went on with the club, and looks forward to going again in the fall.

"We went to Herkimer, N.Y., looking for the double terminated crystals that form in the region," she recalls."Eleanor knew just which rocks to crack open. And her patience is infinite. I've seen her wait over an hour in the rain for one child to finish digging, and she would have waited all day. She's just incredible with the children."

"I know the children get a great deal out of these trips," Banks admits. "But so do I."

Banks enjoys sharing her memories of the trips. "Once, we were going out on a rock hunt in New Hampshire and a child shouted, 'There's a cow coming after you!'

Banks shakes her head and laughs. "That was no cow. It was a bull," she recalls. "I've never seen a group run so fast. I've never run so fast!"

Banks also recalls discovering a pit full of snakes on one trip. "If it wasn't one thing, it was another," she adds, still laughing.

Banks is hoping that the group will get bigger this fall, and she has already invited professors and lecturers to come and speak to the class. "I'm always on the look-out for speakers,"she says. "And I encourage all new members, from ages 1 to 100."

Banks recently injured her knee, and has to walk with the aid of a cane. However, she doesn't expect it to stop her from taking trips this fall, or from attending the opening of a new von Trapp family lodge in Stowe next month, where she has been invited to sing.

Banks is determined not to let anything get in the way of her two biggest loves, music and minerals. She recently sang a solo at the Epiphany Church that startled friends and members.

"Her voice is still young and pure and absolutely beautiful," said Phyllis Knopf, who has known Banks for many years. "The solo was very moving."

"I was born into music," Banks explains. "My mother had a beautiful voice, and I was planning on becoming a concert singer."

Banks was sent north with family friends at the age of 13, where her parents hoped she would get a better education. She spent several years in Hewlett, Long Island, living with those friends and developing her musical abilities through courses in counterpoint and verse at Columbia University.

When she moved to Massachusetts, she joined the Trinity Church and sang with their choir for over 10 years. She has since traveled in Europe twice as a soloist, after winning a scholarship to sing Negro spirituals at the Mozart Taum in Austria.

As much as she treasures her musical talent and the memories it has provided her with, Banks is still recognized as "The Rock Lady" by former members of the Mineral Club.

"I see them on the highways, at rest stops, I see them in town, and I've even seen former students as far away as the Finger Lakes," she says. "I was coming out of the ladies' room once when all of a sudden I heard, "Mama, Mama, the Rock Lady's here!"

The nickname only makes Banks laugh. "Life has been good to me and I've enjoyed every minute of it," she says, fondling her favorite necklace of rough, unpolished amber. "And I'm going to stay right here in Winchester until my eyes close."

Board Sailors Allowed

Local boardsailors can stop being scoff-laws, and enjoy sailing on Upper Mystic Lake with the blessing of the MDC (Metropolitan District Commission) — but just for this year.

The MDC announced last week it will allow board sailing at 10 of the facilities it operates, including Upper, but not Lower, Mystic Lake.

The announcement reverses a ban on board sailing at MDC facilities, issued only a few weeks ago by the regional authority because of safety and liability considerations.(Board sailing is sometimes generically called wind surfing.)

"The MDC is trying to provide spaces on a regional basis, as a stopgap for the remainder of the recreational season," said George O'Malley, director of reservations and recreation for the MDC.

"Rather than open up every facility, we're opening up certain spaces we feel will serve everyone in all areas of our park district," O Malley explained. "We felt the Upper Mystic would serve the same users as the Lower Mystic."

The ban is being lifted for only the rest of this season, pending a study of the issue by the MDC and board sailing supporters.

Upper Mystic was chosen over Lower Mystic because the MDC maintains a police boat there and can provide some safety for the boardsailors, O'Malley said.

Safety was one of the main reasons the MDC banned board sailing at first, he added.

"The primary issue was safety; we wanted to keep boardsailors away from swimmers," O'Malley explained. "There haven't been any reported accidents, but we were just trying to prevent them."

O'Malley said boardsailors are free to use Upper Mystic Lake, and the nine other areas also opened to them last week, with a few simple restrictions.

"They're common-sense rules," he said. "Anyone who goes out on a boat or any kind of sailing craft should be able to swim.

"Swimmers — how can I say this? — have the right-of-way," O'Malley added. "Stay away from public swimming areas; they're marked off by floats and ropes.

"There is a launching ramp near the Tufts Boat House near the dam, and a small parking area, as well," O'Malley said, which should make it easy for boardsailors at Upper Mystic to stay away from the swimming area at Sandy Beach, on the other side of the lake.

The other areas that have been temporarily approved for board sailing are:

the Lynn harbor side of Nahant Beach;

the Ward ave. boat-launching ramp in Waltham; and the Newton duck-feeding area, both on the Charles River — all considered unfavorable by some boardsailors because of water or wind conditions;

Revere Beach at the point of Pine's End; the northern end of Winthrop Beach; and Blessing of the Bay on the Mystic River in Somerville;

The ocean side of Malibu Beach in Dorchester; the northern end of Wollaston Beach; and Stodder's Neck at the Weymouth-Hingham line.

The MDC also voted to allow limited use of the Charles River Basin by "qualified elite-class sailors" on a case-by-case basis.

This winter, the MDC will meet with the Mass. Sailboarding Coalition, an ad hoc group of enthusiasts, dealers, and clubs, to discuss the future of board sailing at MDC facilities, and the possible establishment of rental and lesson operations.

"Besides the matter of safety, there is a question of commercial activity going on along MDC park property to discuss," O'Malley explained.

O'Malley said the group would explore establishing rental and teaching concessions at MDC facilities in 1984, and set standards for them.

All rentals and lessons at MDC facilities are operated as concessions, with the entrepreneurs paying rent to the MDC, and a certain percentage of the gross income, O'Malley explained. Operators must bid on the facilities, and must meet certain specifications.

"I believe if board sailing is being taught, it should be with proper instruction in safety techniques," O'Malley said. "My concern is the quality of instructions delivered; allowing it on MDC property gives it an implied sanction."

O'Malley added that he thinks rental facilities at the parks would enhance them. "Whether it's canoes or cross-country skis or downhill skis or board sails, I think part of the benefit of having rentals is you can take a few lessons, find out it's not your cup of tea, and save yourself $500 to $1,800," he said.

Step To College Is A Doozy

College-Bound Students Cope With New World

By DEMETRA TSECKARES

When the college-bound Winchester High graduates received their diplomas last spring, college, for most of them, seemed far away, and the three months of summer appeared to stretch endlessly in front of them. But now, with less than three weeks to go, before the first day of college, those grads are starting to get a little nervous.

The graduates realize that soon they will be separated from Winchester, its securities, their friends and their families. Rachel Cracknell, who will enter Bates College in Maine this fall, echoes other freshmen with these words, "I have reservations about it (college.) I'm phyched but at the same time I know I won't be around my friends and it won't be the same."

Most of these freshmen-to-be, like Rachel, are nervous about making this huge step in their lives. They know when they arrive at college they will encounter homesickness and insecurity — both socially and academically. These problems, along with more everyday matters like opening a savings account at a local bank, and finding the laundry room, have to be dealt with by the freshmen alone.

By planning ahead, most of these problems don't have to happen. Homesickness can be prevented by bringing part of home with them. Taking advantage of freshmen trips, orientation, and joining extra-curriculur activities can wipe out insecurity. By seeking academic advisement at orientation, most freshmen worries concerning the academic standards can be eased. And the everyday problems can be prevented by knowing the college campus and what it, and the town near the college, can offer.

Although freshmen should have an idea of what to expect at college, they should not expect too much of the school. One of the worst mistakes a freshman can make, according to Jay Sullivan, student director for the student assistant program at Boston College, is deciding what their freshman year will be like before they arrive for the first day of orientation.

"They have a picture in their mind of what that first year will hold, and when they don't find it, they waste a couple of months looking for it," he explains. "Freshmen should keep their minds open about their roommate, schoolwork, and the college in general and take things as they come."

Foremost in the minds of the freshmen interviewed is homesickness — the dreaded disease that no amount of pills or shots can cure. Many are planning ways to combat this disease, however. Because their dorm will become home for the next year of their life, it is natural for homesickness to start and stop there.

Jim Feeley, who will enter Colby College in Maine this fall, plans to make his dorm look like his room at home to fight homesickness. Rachel Cracknell has more specific plans for her Bates dorm. "I'll bring pictures, a plant or two and a big stuffed animal or something," she says. Mark DeAngeles, who can be found at Dartmouth this fall, is planning to fill his dorm with everything except a kitchen sink. He's decided to add a rug to his dorm, and along with the suit cases packed in the family car enroute to New Hampshire, there will be a complete stereo system.

One of the concerns most share among the WHS graduates is leaving friends from behind and having to start all over. Lauren Amico, who will enter the University of New Hampshire, says, "Right now I'm excited about moving away but I'm also scared about all the new people there."

She is planning to join some extra-curricular activities to meet other people. Jim Feeley has also decided that extras are perfect ways to meet people. He's playing football in the fall, and also is interested in the school government. "I might even start taking piano lessons," he says.

Most freshmen are aware, however, that overloading on non-academic activities can result in staring at a horrendous report card. Tim Lawton, who will be commuting to Bentley says, "For the first year I'm not going to do much, I'll need time for my studying, I might join a fraternity but I won't be playing any sports."

Allison Webster, who will be traveling to Florida to attend Rollins, is also concerned about her academic standing. "I'm thinking of doing some swimming when I get there, but I am going to wait and see how much time I have left after classes."

Orientation at most schools includes academic advisement workshops to help incoming freshmen choose their courses. In addition to these workshops, according to Sullivan of Boston College, there are social events and additional workshops like alcohol awareness. Orientations are held, he said to make the freshmen less leery of coming into a completely new environment.

Some schools, in addition to holding orientation for freshmen, also offer pre-orientation trips for them. Dartmouth, Colby and other schools in northern New England offer trips that stretch throughout the state in which the school is located. Rollins in Florida offers sailing trips which Allison Webster will take advantage of. "It's a great way to get to know people — then at orientation it won't be quite so new," she says.

According to Michaeal Trabucco, a sophomore at Keane State College, orientation is also

Deciding On College Unnerving As Well

By DEMETRA TSECKARES.

The room looked like a waiting room for preppie fathers to be. I had never seen so many high school guys in topsiders, tan chinos, and navy blue blazers pacing the floors before. And the girls all looked like they were waiting for their prom dates to arrive. I reeled when I saw the hot pink, the kelly green, and the bright yellow skirts and blouses on the obviously nervous girls.

Definitely ivy material I thought as I headed into the reception room of the admissions office.

"Can I help you?" croaked the receptionist.

"Yes, I have an appointment for an interview at 10," I answered, smiling my confident and cool smile reserved for college interviews.

Well, there I was, about to enter a strange room, and tell an unfamiliar person why I want to go to that college.

Just about all of my classmates have to endure the same torture before we all arrive for the first day of our senior year at Winchester High School. Starting in July, a nationwide pilgrimage to colleges begins. And while their parents and themselves descend upon the colleges like flies, many of the soon-to-be seniors begin to wish they were in kindergarten again.

But searching out the ideal college is, like the 18th birthday, a milestone in every teenager's life.

Coming of age in America just isn't as easy as it used to be, I thought to myself.

Taking the general information card back into the crowded waiting room, I glanced around hoping I didn't look like the other girls waiting to be interviewed. Sweat was dripping from one girl's forehead, and another had developed a nervous twitch. I laughed when I realized that the parents were equally nervous. Even the veterans of the college game were tense, folding and refolding the college pamphlets they had picked up.

Some of the more concerned parents were pointing out to their kids interesting trivia about the

Shield's, McGoldrick Win Men's Titles

By DAVE LEECO

Perseverance paid off for the Shield System's and McGoldrick's men's softball teams Tuesday night, as the two squads became the champions of Winchester Men's Softball.

After making the playoffs for the past seven years, the Shield System team finally won the A Division championships with a 5-4, extra-inning victory over Bellino's.

And McGoldrick's, which has been dreaming of a championship since it was formed five years ago, got their B Division crown by stomping The Defenders 17-6.

The members of the two teams got the thrill every softball player tries for, capturing a piece of glory usually forgotten after high school sports days end.

They did it in front of a crowd of friends, relatives, wives and long-time local sports fans, who sat in the bleachers and behind the backstop at Ginn Field arguing over plays, groaning over errors, and reminiscing over when that second baseman or this left fielder used to play ball for the Sachems.

The fans were treated to two distinctly different styles of baseball in the back-to-back playoff games.

The Shield-Bellino's contest was a defensive battle, with the key play of the game being a Shields double-play that prevented Bellino's from taking the game in the final inning.

The McGoldrick's-Defenders contest, despite the name of one of the teams, was anything but a defensive game. McGoldrick's put the game away in a single, eight-run inning that featured a triple, a homer and enough errors to make Dick Stuart look like Brooks Robinson.

The A Division began the four-hour night of softball under the lights, with league leader Bellino's taking on Shield Systems.

The two teams were so close through the game they could have been sharing the same bench. They swapped runs after the first inning for a 1-1 tie, and then Bellino's eked out a razor-thin one-run lead by scoring in the second.

The score stayed the same through three innings, as the two teams played snappy ball in the infield and missed nothing in the outfield.

Shield started breaking away in the late innings, though, going ahead 3-2 in the fifth and 4-2 in the top of the sixth.

They held the lead until the bottom of the seventh and final inning. Suddenly, with a series of singles, a couple off throws and a few Texas Leaguers, Bellino's tied the game 4-4 and loaded the bases.

But the Shield System squad wasn't about to let this game get away from them. The team had missed too many chances at the crown before — the team had made the playoffs nearly every year since it was formed nine years ago, but hadn't won a championship since 1976.

Shortstop Steve Keenan took a hard grounder near the bag, stepped on second for one out, flipped the ball to first baseman Danny Alterisio for the double play, and ended the Bellino's threat.

The score stayed tied for three extra innings, until Sheild got up in the top of the 10th.

With one out, pitcher Paul Christerson pounded a double over the left fielder's head. One out later, the team's manager, Peter Blanchard, punched a single to score Christerson and give Shield the winning margin.

If the fans at Ginn were disappointed they didn't see more hitting in the A Division game they only had to wait for McGoldrick's to steamroll their way to the B Division title.

In the first three innings, The Defenders and McGoldrick's scored a total of 16 runs. Unfortunately for The Defenders, 12 of those belonged to their opponents.

The Defenders had scratched out a couple of runs in the first and one in the second, but fell behind 4-3 on a three-run McGoldrick's homer.

They tied it up in the top of the third for a brief moment of glory before McGoldrick's brought the curtain down.

A Mark McGoldrick single started the debacle, and when Kevin Pierce's grounder to second was thrown away, runners were on second and third.

Mike Seigfried belted a long sacrifice fly to left to score one runner, but he shouldn't have made the sacrifice.

Chip Roche (who would later pound the only legitimate home run of the game into the trees in right field) crushed a long triple to right to score Pierce, and McGoldrick's was ahead 6-4.

They kept moving ahead when Steve McCue's grounder was thrown away. Roche scored and McCue went to second, to be sent home on a hard-hit single up the first base line by Bobby McGoldrick.

Jeff McGoldrick beat out a close play at first, and while the first baseman argued the call (holding the ball all the time), Pierce came around the bases.

McGoldrick's would score five more runs, on a bunch of errors and Roche's two-run homer. Meanwhile, they were shutting out The Defenders, turning one double play in the fifth to end one threat.

McGoldrick's got sloppy in the final inning, giving up a pair of runs to The Defenders, but with a 13-run lead they could afford to be sloppy.

And with the championship, McGoldrick's began that time-honored softball tradition, the victory beer-drinki[illegible] session. Shield, of course, had starte[illegible] their l[illegible]es two hours before, waiting with their trophy to congratulate their fellow champions.

Champions Play To Recapture Youth

By DEMETRA TSECKARES

Some people spend years trying to find a way to stay young. Others, like the McGoldrick Paper team members, have already found that magical cure and for them it is softball.

This group of mostly-27-year-olds has been playing on this team since it was formed by Bobby McGoldrick in honor of his father five years ago.

Most of the players are graduates of the 1974 class at Winchester High, where, according to Mike Feltes, "They played sports together and they partied together." This tradition has hung on — during the summer they repeat those high school days, playing softball during the day and partying at night.

But the promise of a party following a game is not the only reason these men play softball. Chuck Mandrachia says, "It's a good outlet. Since we got out of college we don't get many chances to get involved in a team oriented sport." Elliot Miller adds, "We try not to take the game too seriously, we play it for fun."

But a spectator would not be able to see this watching the team in action however. After five years of almost making it to the finals in the league tournament, they have finally done it. On Thursday, they smothered Mahoney's Rocky ledge team 11-4. This placed them in the finals — which they have coveted ever since they began playing.

Being in the top spot of a sport is not unusual to these men. All of them, according to Feltes, played a sport in high school and most of them continued playing in college. Going pro was not seriously considered by most of them unless, jokes Elliot Miller "You mean pro softball."

While professional athletics aren't in their minds, getting old is. When asked if they were afraid of getting old, Mandrachia answered, "No just practical about it." Another player added, "Usually we take it easy, in important games we take more chances...we get hurt easier."

Another reason they play on the team is the comraderie involved with it. According to Feltes, camaraderie amongst other teams is strong. "At the end of a game we all shake hands...it's a good tradition."

But strong friendships within the team is one of the more popular reasons for playing the sport. This is obvious during a game when comments like "Let's starch their shirts buddy" fly through the air as often as hard-hit fly balls.

Playing softball is also a way to keep the group together. As Elliot Miller points out, "There is a mixed bag of people here." And the truth of this statement is overwhelming. There are lawyers, construction workers, bankers

All Stars Win Away From Tourney Title

By LIZ WILLEN

Coach Bob Nutile calls his 13-year-old Babe Ruth All-Star players "hungry." They were hungry enough to come through in the clutch, come from behind and win a ball game.

On Monday night at Trumm Field in Somerville, in the top of the fifth, they were behind 6-0, yet they emerged as victors, feeding Natick a 9-7 loss in the third game of the Somerville Silver Anniversary Tournament.

The team has a chance to take the tournament by beating the winner of a Natick-Somerville contest scheduled for last night.

"Another typical game for these kids," said Nutile, shaking his head. "Nothing ever comes easy." Nutile, who had scouted the Natick team last week, told his team that they couldn't hit. He was ready to eat his words after the first inning, when Natick got four hits and four runs.

"We were shocked," he said. "I was shocked. And it got worse. It was like a German blitzkreig coming on."

In the second inning, Natick scored two more, and Winchester didn't understand what was going on. But it didn't help them get on base. It wasn't until the fifth inning that they did something about their hunger pangs and fed Natick a taste of their own medicine.

But Nutile had one more situation to remedy before this could happen. In the top of the fourth inning, Nutile took pitcher Sean McElhinney out after a Natick player doubled and another player walked.

"McElhinney just didn't know what was going on. None of us knew what was going on. But it was time for a change, so ace Al Nasson came in. He walked his first batter and the bases were loaded."

To Nasson, Nutile, and the parents who were biting their fingers in the stands, the popup that followed was an omen of better things to come in the fifth inning.

"We got right back into the ball game after that," said Nutile. Winchester loaded the bases after Greg Wyse walked, Bill Morton singled, and Al Nasson walked. A single by Ralph Sexeny drove in two, and Winchester was looking more respectable.

"At that point, I turned to the third base umpire and said, We're going to get at least one more run this inning," said Nutile. He had a reason to be confident; the bases were loaded and no men were out. Sure enough, Frank Gianci singled and drove home Sexeny.

Natick responded by changing pitchers; a feat they repeated four times in that eventful fifth inning.

But Winchester's momentum continued. Greg Wyse walked, bringing in Gianci, and Morton singled with the bases loaded, bringing in two more runs.

"Natick was going for the jugular," said Nutile. "Their poor coach was pacing around like a caged lion."

But it was Winchester who roared. After Morton's second single of the inning, Nasson walked, loading the bases, and Sexeny singled, driving in another run. After an hour-long inning that sent 14 men to the plate, Winchester was ahead, 8-6.

"It's typical of these guys," muttered Nutile. "But we felt a lot better. And Nasson was really firing that ball. I haven't seen him throw that hard in three weeks."

Natick did not ignite in their half of the fifth, and Winchester made a brief threat in the sixth. Ed Farley singled, Kenny Double sacrificed him to second, and McElhinney and Colozzi walked, loading the bases. Outs by Wyse and Morton ended the threat, and the men were left on base.

Natick was able to score one more run in the sixth, after a player who walked came in on a double. That left Winchester ahead by only one run in the top of the seventh, their final at-bat.

"We really wanted to score another," said Nutile. "And sure enough, we did." Sexeny doubled, and Gianci singled, scoring Sexeny. It would have taken three runs by Natick in the last inning to top a jubilant Winchester team.

But Nasson, who was "really psyched," according to Nutile, popped out one batter and struck out the last two.

"What a job he did," said Nutile. "And what a game. This team may have forgotten what it was like to win earlier

One Of Top Five

Team Bound For Playoffs

ENDING THE INNING — Bobby McGoldrick, having made the play at second, leaves the base long before the Mahoney's runner ever arrives in the Winchester Men's Softball championship semifinal Thursday. McGoldrick's was one step ahead of Mahoney's all evening, winning 11-4. (Staff Photo by Amy Sweeney)

Groux Proposes New Beach House

The recent suspicious fire that caused extensive damage to the beach house at Leonard's Pool prompted Town Manager Thomas Groux to suggest the possibility of building a new facility closer to the parking lot and the beach.

In a memo to DPW Director Dom Serratore and Recreation Director Ken Cereghino, Groux outlined several alternative suggestions.

Groux noted that the town has $9,842 available in two accounts, plus $55,000 insurance money for the damages. He pointed out that the present location of the shack has not prevented vandalism, and is too far removed from the beach to be adequately monitored by beach personnel.

He also noted that the location is too far from the beach for the bathrooms to be used conveniently by swimmers, thus encouraging unhealthy habits among young bathers.

Groux mentioned that the old beach house shack is too large and unattractive, and suggested that a new structure closer to the beach could also be used as a gatehouse. In that case, he pointed out, the attendant could also serve as a checker for non-residents.

Groux suggested that the new structure be small but substantial enough to be used as vandal-proof as possible. Also, if it were closer to the pool, emergency supplies would be more available to the lifeguards.

Groux also forwarded a copy of the memo to the Zoning Board of Appeals, to get some suggestions on whether his ideas would comply with zoning regulations.

Tennis Tourney Coming Up

The tournament will be held on two weekends, Sept. 10-11 and Sept. 17-18. Players can compete in up to two of the six divisions — men's and women's singles and doubles, mixed doubles, and men's over-45 singles.

Applications are available from Whit Gray, supervisor of the Packer Courts, at the Ruggles and Bowker Sports Center on Main st., or the Winchester Indoor Tennis Center on East st.

The completed application, plus the application fee, should be sent to Martin Zombeck, 42 Fletcher st.

Applications are now available for the largest town tennis tourney of the year, the Winchester Tennis Assn.'s Fall Tennis Tournament.

The season-ending tournament, the biggest of the year for the Tennis Assn., regularly draws nearly 200 applicants.

and engineers on the team. Just about every job — except as Indian Chief — is represented on the McGoldrick team. Softball is the common denominator which keeps these men coming back for more summer after summer.

in the season when they dropped three in a row, but they remembered in a hurry. And they've been winning ever since."

While Nutile gives credit to key hitters like Bill Morton, who is batting an impressive .552, he also mentioned the enthusiasm and support he's gotten from the players who sit on the bench.

"It can be tough for these guys, but they've been great," he said. "They give us lots of support." Nutile said that Dave Tucci, George Venuti, Paul Capodanno, Shane Wyse and Mike Casalinuovo were every bit as much a part of the team as the rest of the huge, hungry and awesome 13-year-olds.

Classic Glass Can Handle Just About Any Glass Or Mirror Job.

With more than 25 years of experience in glass repair, Bill Brodie of Classic Glass, 287 Salem st., Woburn can handle just about any glass or mirror job in your home or automobile.

The 14-person crew at Classic Glass specializes in glass replacement services on all foreign and domestic makes and model autos and trucks. "Actually we repair and install safety glass in any type of vehicle," explains Brodie. "We also do work on larger trucks and heavy construction equipment."

Classic Glass also offers mobile service on glass repair and will pick up and return your car or truck to your office or home or will repair it on location, weather permitting. There is no extra charge for the service and it is covered by comprehensive insurance in Massachusetts.

"All our glass repair work is guaranteed for as long as you own the car," says Brodie. Our sunroofs also carry the same guarantee.

"We probably install more sunroofs here than any other single location in Eastern Massachusetts," adds Brodie. "We deal in both wholesale and retail sunroofs."

Classic Glass also offers custom mirror work. They can turn out any size or shape mirror for your home, office or tabletop.

Another unique glass service offered by Classic Glass involves old cars and trucks. "We have quite a stock of old windshields for cars and trucks between the 40s and 60s," explains Brodie. "We also have a locator service involving hundreds of glass companies throughout the United States to track down hard to locate windshields and windows for old model cars and trucks."

For all your glass and mirror work, old and new, or for sunroof installation on any car or truck and for windows for older cars, visit Classic Glass Monday through Friday 8-5, Saturdays 8-12.

CIVIL WAR Unit looking for members. The 5th Massachusetts Battery is made up of people in the Greater Boston area interested in the Civil War. There are two divisions: (1) competition shooting divisions which is a North-South Skirmish Association unit that competes in team matches with a full sized muzzleloading cannon as well as with muskets, carbines and revolvers of the pre-1865 era. And (2) the "chowder and marching division" which takes part in parades, battle re-enactments, and authentic living history demonstrations. You can join either or both depending on your interests. The musket and carbine shooting events involve team shooting at breakable targets with the shortest elapsed time determining the winning team. It's fun if you're interested in black powder shooting. For further information contact 5th Mass. Battery, John Humphrey, 195 West st., Reading, or Al Goscinak, 27 Washington st., Charlestown, by phone or mail 3 18TF

LACK INSULATION? STILL CUT HEAT LOSS

Bitterly cold winter weather, spiraling fuel costs, and the energy saving program have created a record demand for insulation and a shortage in insulation products. While waiting for insulation deliveries, homeowners are urged to crack down on areas of heat loss by other means.

Storm windows and storm doors can go a long way toward keeping heat loss down. Considerable heat loss can also be avoided by caulking or weatherstripping. Caulking can plug small gaps and cracks on the exterior of a house where air or moisture may be seeping in. Weatherstripping should create a tight fit between the moveable part of a window or door and the frame.

Still other steps homeowners can use to conserve on energy include: Changing furnace filters; closing the fireplace damper when not in use; repairing hot water leaks (it takes a lot of fuel to heat that water in the first place)' pulling draperies shut at night and opening draperies toward the sunlight during the day time.

Proper use of the thermostat can save more fuel than you would imagine. Turn down the thermostat at night and when you are away from home.

Saldi Academy Reopens

The Donna Saldi Academy of Dance will reopen its doors for its second season, on Sept. 10.

On June 9, students of the academy participated in its first annual recital. The recital included such hits as Mickey, Gloria and Eye of the Tiger. Donna Saldi performed a ballet number to "Chariots of Fire." At the end of the recital perfect attendance awards were presented to those students who qualified and refreshments were enjoyed by all.

Students of the academy received national recognition through the National Council of Dance Teachers Organization Inc. and the Dance Teachers Club of Boston when they were tested in ballet and tap dancing. Anna Kelleher and Carol White of Winchester both received superior honors in ballet.

Saldi offers the National Medal Testing program to those students who would like to earn an achievement for their hard work and dedication in the field of dance. Students are judged on technique, appearance and presentation in various levels of the performing arts. This year over 2,000 medal test exams have been given to dance students in the Unites States, Canada and Italy. Saldi has received 12 medals in ballet, tap and jazz dancing from the council, three of which were gold.

Saldi is a graduate of the Dance Teachers Club of Boston-Teachers Training course and holds the position of secretary to the Suffolk County Junior Miss Scholarship Program. Saldi is the originator of a dance therapy program for a drug rehabilitation center in Boston and is an active member of the Eleanor Rubino Dance Troupe of Boston.

The academy is now accepting registration for its 1983-84 season. Classes are held at the VFW Hall on River st. Classes range from pre-school to adult, beginner to advanced and will include ballet, tap, jazz, and pointe. Acrobatic classes will be offered to only pre-school to beginner.

Saldi offers perfect attendance awards, the National Medal Testing Program, annual recital with full costume, full-year dance scholarships, and special family rates.

Engineer, Publisher And Philanthropist James L. Jenks Dies At 87

Research scientist, philanthropist and the man who lent his name to the Jenks Senior Center, James L. Jenks Jr., 87, died Aug. 17 in the Winchester Hospital, an institution he had given generously to.

A memorial service was held on Aug. 20 at the First Congregational Church, with the Rev. Walter B. Davis conducting the service. Burial was in Wildwood Cemetery. Lane Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.

Mr. Jenks was research engineer who perfected the electrocardiogram and rose to become president of the Sanborn Company in Cambridge.

A religious man, he was the publisher of an inspirational magazine since 1959, a magazine that reached 19,100 subscribers.

In Winchester, Mr. Jenks was best known as the friend of the seniors who made the Jenks Senior Center possible with his donation of $250,000.

"It's heartbreaking, we've lost a very good friend and a very interested one," commented Pauline McGuigan of the Winchester Council on Aging. "I think everybody, from the person on the street to the officers of the council and the trustees of the Seniors Assn., feels a sense of loss.

"I never heard anybody say anything that wasn't good about him," said McGuigan.

Mr. Jenks was known in town for his cheerfulness and his willingness to help, and in spite of illness and lameness enjoyed many outside activities. He was a friendly man whom most referred to as "Jim." Raymond Murphy, past president of the Winchester Seniors Assn., recalled that "he was a very humorous person."

Mr. Jenks, who was born in Pawtucket, R.I., on Aug. 7, 1896, was proud of his ancestry. His paternal ancestor, Joseph Jenks, came to this country in 1640 and obtained the first patent granted in the colonies when he was a millwright in the Saugus Iron Works. Joseph Jenks' son, Joseph, built a mill in Pawtucket in 1670, and the city grew up around that mill. Mr. Jenks' father, James L. Jenks Sr., was a long-time member of the Rhode Island state legislature.

Mr. Jenks attended the Moses Brown School in Providence, where he first showed his promise as an inventor when he built a 16-foot glider that flew a short distance before crashing. In 1920, he graduated from Brown University with a bachelor of arts degree in liberal arts.

Before his graduation, he served for a year in the U.S. Naval Reserve during World War I. In 1921, he married Evelyn Makant.

Mr. Jenks joined the Sanborn Co. in Cambridge after five years at American Radio and Research Corp., a pioneer radio firm in Medford.

In Cambridge and later in Waltham, he worked as a research engineer and salesman. It was at Sanborn that he perfected several models of the EKG electrocardiogram machine, many of which are still being used today.

Mr. Jenks became president of Sanborn in 1942, and during his tenure the company grew from 50 employees to over 1,000. Under Mr. Jenks' leadership, Sanborn Co. was non-union, with a profit-sharing plan for its workers, who all owned voting stock.

He became chairman of Sanborn in 1961, and retired in 1963 after guiding his company into a merger with Hewlett-Packard of Palo Alto, Calif.

A close friend of the late Dr. Paul Dudley White, Mr. Jenks joined an expedition in 1952 led by Dr. White in the Bering Sea off Alaska. There, Mr. Jenks became the first man to take a cardiogram of a swimming whale. Earlier, he had taken pioneer cardiograms of elephants in collaboration with Dr. Francis Benedict of the Carnegie Nutrition Laboratories of Harvard University.

While still with Sanborn Co., in 1959, Mr. Jenks began to publish the inspirational magazine, "Praying Hands," which took its title from the beautiful chapel he had given to the Sanborn Co. employees.

The altar had an unusual cloth, beautiful old candlesticks, and three Bibles — Jewish, Catholic and Protestant. The carving in front of the altar was of praying hands. This chapel was much used by Sanborn employees, but after the merger it was removed to the Boston Evening Clinic, where patients coming in could find a refuge and place to meditate.

A few weeks ago, Mr. Jenks was awarded an honorary L.L.D. degree from Gordon College for his interest and gifts to that institution.

He had many interests — memberships in the Winchester Country Club, the Algonquin Club of Boston, the First Congregational Church in Winchester, and especially the Seniors Assn. He was a trustee of the Museum of Science and the New England Baptist Hospital.

He also had one thing that was very special to him — his Aston-Martin car, with the tantalizing "J. Bond" license plates. The car was a hobby very dear to him, and those who saw him driving it will never forget the picture.

At the time of his death, Mr. Jenks had just completed his lively and interesting memoirs. The pages had gone to the bindery when he was in the hospital, so he never saw the completed book. He had planned to autograph each copy, and this was the only unfinished task that he left.

Mr. Jenks is survived by his wife, Evelyn (Makant) Jenks.

To all who knew him, he was a legend in his time.

"If you want to find a man's true worth,

Look for the good he has done on earth."

JAMES JENKS — The late James L. Jenks Jr. will be remembered as a scientist who perfected the electrocardiogram or the publisher of the inspirational magazine "Praying Hands." But in Winchester, he will be best remembered as the philanthropist whose $250,000 helped make the Jenks Senior Center possible. Mr. Jenks is shown (counterclockwise from top) breaking ground for the Senior Center on Dec. 2, 1976, chatting with Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Hood at the opening of the center on April 2, 1978, and captured in oils for a painting which hangs in the library of the center.

the time when many incoming freshmen are reminded that everyday needs which are taken for granted at home will not be supplied by the college. They are reminded to bring hangers, wastebaskets, and towels.

They are also encouraged to set up a bank account at a local bank. According to Liz Gifford of the Winchester Savings Bank, funds should be transferred from the home bank in the form of cash or travelers' checks. This, she explains, is faster than using bank checks which often can take two weeks to clear.

Furthermore, she explains that because most banks have a required minimum amount in order to open a checking account, college students should look for the closest bank with the lowest minimum. She adds that some banks in college towns do not require a minimum knowing that a lot of freshmen do not have the means to meet it.

And finally, the freshmen are told to pack plenty of quarters. Not only necessary in arcades, the quarters are also needed in the laundry room. Remembering this can prevent last minute trips back up to the dorm to hunt up some quarters from your roommate, or racing to the bank to withdraw enough money to send a load of socks and sheets through the wash.

College days are often fondly remembered by alumni. Most of them remember the good times they had with their friends; often forgetting the first few harrowing weeks that they also shared. What is looming in front of the 1983 graduates of WHS seems trivial to them now, but to the freshmen, the hundreds of unknown faces, unfamiliar surroundings and classes seem to be difficult obstacles lying in wait for them.

Hopefully, by knowing what to expect and at the same time not expecting too much, these freshmen will, in the future, look back and reminisce about the first exciting days.

Maybe in 10 years they will look back on it all and laugh. After-all, as one Harvard administrator says, "The only thing I can tell freshmen is to keep their sense of humor."

college.

"Oh look, Johnny, this school has more Alskan students than any other school in New England."

She didn't realize that Johnny was staring at the section marked "social life." He noted that this school was surrounded by four other colleges, one of which was a women's school. He hoped that the interview would go well here.

"Demetra?" I heard.

Glancing up I realized that the man standing in front of me was my interviewer. As I shook his hand I wondered if he would be able to tell that I didn't read Shakespeare in my spare time, and that Beethoven bored me.

As I walked toward the room where the ordeal would occur I noticed the sympathetic glances shot my way by the other kids in the waiting room.

"Come in and sit wherever you like," he said smiling genially.

"Thank you," I said with my reserved smile.

"So, why do you want to attend this school?"

I answered him but I couldn't help noticing that he was beginning to look like a vulture.

Finally our little "chat" was over and I staggered back into the reception room.

When I walked into the room I was met with a series of gasps from the horrified kids waiting for their turn. Two of them looked ready to jump up and run, terrified, out of the building. I glanced at a mirror and realized my hair was standing on end, my makeup had dripped off, and my hands were shaking.

I knew, as well as anyone in the room, how artificial and terrifying these interviews are.

During the tour I kept shooting my college interview smile to the tour guide in case he was a spy for the admissions office. Finally after traipsing all over the campus we returned to the admissions office.

As I climbed into the car grasping the college application in my hand, I kicked off my shoes and untucked my blouse. I sighed as we turned onto the highway in the direction of the next school on the list.

"Hey, Dad, maybe I'll just join the Army."

He shot me a look as he continued driving down the road. Realizing that the whole ridiculous project of applying to colleges was worth the end results, I put on my shoes and tucked my blouse back in, sighing in resignation.

Job Bank Wraps Up On Fri.

Jobs have included some full-time positions such as clerical and reception work with a law firm and a local company. Part-time positions have included housework, yardwork, child care, animal care, and plant care as well as garage clean up and painting. Employees were matched with employers on the basis of location and ability.

The Job Bank, sponsored by the Winchester Recreation Dept. served as an extension of the Jenks Senior Center Job Connection. It is a Recreation Dept. summer program which operates June through August.

The summer is quickly drawing to a close and with it the Recreation Dept.'s Summer Job Bank. The Job Bank has served as a job referral service for kids ages 12 to 18, and has matched the job needs of the community with the resources of Winchester youths. This is the first summer the Job Bank has been in operation and it has proved extremely successful.

Over the course of 11 weeks, the Job Bank has received applications from 60 employers with 88 job requests. Many successful matches have been made with both satisfied employers and employees.
